For the HERALD, "IN IT REAL".

REPLY TO SETTLE REALM OF SANTA BARBARA.

"Is it real?" you ask in your singling— The vision that comes to your mind, Of orange groves, willows and hedge-rows, And flowers with odors faint;

And streamlets, and fountains, and bird-songs, That ripple the odorous air, And mirror the home of the ransomed, More nearly than tolling an air;

The broad-spreading vineyards, all laden With clusters so rich and so rare, So rich and so sweet is the seeming, So charming, d-lightful and fair?

No wonder, when absent from vision, It seems like a dream of the night; For you it is real, and present, Revealed to our wondering sight.

Views, soft as a sorrow remembered, And sweet as a hope of the heart, Supply the exactions of fancy, And purest enjoyment impart.

And "angels of beauty" are dwelling In the homes and the hearts we hold dear, And another will swell the glad choir, Whenever you call us here. D. M. BERRY.

LETTER FROM ANAHEIM.

ANAHEIM, Oct. 3, 1873.

EDITOR HERALD: Not the least known among the notable places in Southern California, is this beautiful and enterprising little city of Anaheim.

Three or four years ago, I remember seeing distributed about in some of the towns of the western States, and published in the newspapers, the prospectus of this, until then, un-heard-of colony. I had not then the remotest idea of ever visiting the place or of recording its growth.

That it should attain the prominence and degree of prosperity it now enjoys, within so few years, was scarcely hoped for by its most sanguine citizens.

Those who originated the Anaheim Colonization scheme, and labored for its success, have now just cause to be proud of their enterprise. To the success of this, is attributable, in a great measure, the success of the neighboring settlements, the growth of which seem as marvellous as that of Anaheim. When the projected improvements are made in its irrigating facilities, which, when completed, will enable all to have water enough, and to spare, Anaheim will be another impetus to further its growth.

To give anything like a minute account of the past history and present aspect of the city and vicinity, would be attempting too much at one time. Therefore, at this time, I will merely allude to a few of its most prominent characteristics and chronicle a few of the noteworthy events of the day.

Anaheim is famed for its charming, home-like cottages, and surpassingly beautiful gardens, in which the flowery kingdom is well represented. Tourists who come to Los Angeles should not fail to pay this pretty little village and surroundings, a visit. It will show, better than any other place in California, what can be made out of what was a barren waste. Two hotels, the "Planters" and the "Anaheim," each of which is more commodious, and better kept than are hotels usually found in places of this size, offer rest and refreshments to the weary traveler. Your humble writer put up at the "Planters" and fared well. I am compatible in "setting up" some of the things for the readers of his paper. The compliments of the HERALD were forthwith presented, and in return the good will of the Californian was assured.

Under the office of the Californian, I ventured thither entering the "sanctum." I found the genial editor, Mr. Melrose, engaged in "setting up" some good things for the readers of his paper. The compliments of the HERALD were forthwith presented, and in return the good will of the Californian was assured.

The beautiful church edifice, recently dedicated, is about the handsomest in the county, and is situated in the center of a thrifty vineyard. As the building is the "House of the Lord," it is presumable that the vineyard goes with the property. The buildings thus far are of lumber, but a good quality of brick is being made near the city. A new Odd Fellows' Hall is now nearly finished, of that material, and is a creditable improvement to the town.

At an early hour in the forenoon of Wednesday, two rather suspicious-looking persons were observed traversing the streets as though looking for somebody, or rivaling each other in obtaining the most reliable data for a city directory. From the best information obtainable, I supposed them to have come from Los Angeles. They were not together, nor did they travel in the same vehicle; but judging from the similarity of their manœuvres, and their manner of interviewing the citizens, I concluded both were on the same mission.

While sitting at the hotel office in the evening, the sound of a bell fell upon my ears, ("bells" have always had irresistible charms for me), and soon a crier made his appearance at the door and announced, in a very un-musical voice, that "good speech" would soon commence at the public hall, and all were invited to attend. Especially was it desirable that a representative of the HERALD should be present. The American people are always in a mood to listen to good addresses on almost any subject. Deeming this an opportunity not to be lost, quite a respectable number gathered at the place designated. A gentleman took the chair carrying one across the hall for safety, there being more persons than chairs in the room, and announced, in a few words, the object of the meeting. Another gentleman took the floor, and began with the address of the evening. He was immediately identified as one of the suspicious-looking men seen in the morning, and proved to be a highly esteemed citizen of Los Angeles, who takes some interest in the present judicial contest in this district. For about an hour the speaker sought to enlighten the audience on various subjects, chief of which was as to "What Constitutes a Judge?" i. e., the ideal District Judge. His views on the subject seemed to be sound, and, I presume, were generally concurred in by the audience, as none present had anything to say to the contrary. The force of habit was very clearly illustrated in the speaker, as he persistently addressed the audience as "Gentlemen of the Jury," to the great mortification of all present, particularly the lady who greeted the occasion by her presence, and occupied one of the front seats. A citizen of Anaheim then made a "few remarks" in an animated manner, and thoroughly reviewed the whole situation; after which the crowd dispersed, feeling that all could now vote understandingly, at least on the 15th instant.

During a future visit, I hope to give the readers of the HERALD additional facts about Anaheim; and before closing, will say that the advent of the HERALD was hailed with much pleasure and interest by the people of Anaheim, and a liberal patronage for it, there, is bespoken.

A Life Scene.

You know her. She lives on your street. Her features are either plucked, or full and frowsy. Her dress is wet, ill-fitting and no particular pattern; her slippers are broken down; her hair uncombed; her voice is either coarse or shrill. You have seen her stand out in the back yard, and put a bare arm up to her eyes, and under it peer out to a fence or barn, where a man in an ill-fitting coat is searching for something, and heard her shout: "John! can't George bring me some water?"

And you have heard him cry back: "If I don't get the water I'll take every inch of flesh off from his bones."

And when you have looked at her again, does it seem possible that those angry eyes had drooped in suddenly respect or mild contentment to the face of the ill-fitting coat. Can you by any possible wrench of the imagination, conceive of his tenderly passing peppermints to her; of his taking her hand in his and busily squeezing it. Many a God bless your eyes, followed by a "passel of fools." And—but George is rubbing his head, and we turned aside while our heroine re-adjusted her slipper. [Danbury News.
