

The DAILY HERALD has nearly DOUBLE the Circulation of either contemporary paper published in Los Angeles. As an advertising medium it is consequently DOUBLE their value.

The Herald and the Fair.

Now that all has been said on both sides which reason, wrath, malice, prejudice and opinion have been able to suggest, it will be well for members of the Association and others to review the situation, and the position of the HERALD in regard to it. The great outcry is over, and on defense can subservise any ulterior end. The Herald is not ashamed to publish what has done for the Association, for from the first number, which was published on the 21st of October, until the last day of the races, this journal was unceasing in its efforts to make the meeting a success. If any member of the Association doubts this statement, let him call at this office, and he will find the Fair and the Races far better and more constantly advertised than elsewhere.

Firstly—The programme of all six days' racing was inserted gratis for 30 days in the HERALD. Secondly—There were more frequent references to and longer complimentary notices of the Fair in this journal than in the other morning paper.

Thirdly—This paper sent out a reporter every day, for five days before the races, to give accounts of the horses and detail the doings and preparations of the association.

Fourthly—It engaged a short-hand reporter for the race week and gave longer, fuller and better reports of the races than any other paper; and lastly, it never said one word in disparagement of the management until the last morning, when nothing could affect for better or worse the success of the present year, and no harm could be done, pecuniarily, to the stockholders.

What the HERALD has said, it has said calmly, deliberately and conscientiously. It has published no unjust or malicious statements. Its opposition has been uncompromising and severe, but genuine. It has sought for no popularity in its denunciations, and feared "no powers that be."

By the present course of the HERALD the association will be benefitted in the end, and with it the interests of all Southern California.

Not in defiance, but merely as an item, the HERALD mentions the fact of its having received fifty new subscribers this week, and lost but two. This journal will never be afraid to maintain a fearlessly independent position in regard to all questions, and whilst it will never truckle to the people, it will never bow to a ring.

DELEGATE McCORMICK is in Washington, stirring up the mail interests of Arizona. It is now in order for the Los Angeles Chamber to assist him by a resolution and petition for a daily mail with Prescott.

The Los Angeles Express, for probably the hundredth time, calls attention to the need of gaslight on the streets of that city. The Express, however, handles the subject too gingerly. It only seeks "an arrangement" with the gas company. What Los Angeles needs is some bold, vigorous action which shall at once make the gas monopoly come to terms. That city is supplied with a quality of gas which is a little the worst ever furnished to any town. For this gas an exorbitant price is charged. The gas company has an exclusive franchise, which runs for many years yet; but we question such a franchise, clearly against the interests of the people, will stand in law. The company refuses to light the streets of the city, except on its own exorbitant terms, and with this arrogant monopoly the local journals are weakly calling for a compromise. Let Los Angeles condemn the gas works to public use, pay the company their exact value and run them herself. Then her people may have gas on easy terms.

EDITORS HERALD: Seeing that Col. Warner has called the attention of the Chamber of Commerce to the exposure of the city to a loss by a flood of the river, permit me to state in your columns that in the winter of 1825, the river covered up with alluvial deposits, mostly sand, to the depth of three or four feet, a vineyard upon the Wolfskill property, situated nearly midway between Alameda and San Pedro streets.

J. D. Whitney, State Geologist, has submitted his biennial report to the Governor. He gives an account of the work done on a number of maps and ornithological and other scientific books now in course of publication, and states that inasmuch as the Legislature has been unwilling to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to enable him to carry on the work as fast as desirable, he has concluded to sever his connection with that department, and will under no circumstances serve longer than July 1, 1875. He asks for the early appropriation of $100,000 to enable him to complete the work now on hand by the above named date.

MORE OPINIONS. EDITOR HERALD:—As rival papers have so severely commented on your criticisms on the conduct and failure of the Fair at the Rink, we take the liberty to encourage you in your "treason" to our beautiful valley.

The grandest agricultural, pomological, horticultural and sericultural possibilities of America centre here. And yet, under the present management of the District composed of several counties, this is probably the poorest exhibit ever given in California, though others have been held representing a single county. The few who did exhibit fruit and young trees did nobly. Fine wines, etc., from a few manufacturers were presented, but the display was meagre, and many strangers and citizens were heard to pronounce the Fair as a whole, a disgraceful fraud. Some who came here with money to purchase, develop and beautify, have gone to other parts of the State disgusted, and we too say, "better no Fair than such."

The newspapers are to-day at once the people's rostrum and teachers; and our help must come in open, fearless criticism; and that is our best friend, that most openly cautious, faithfully instructs and fearlessly defends our every interest.

Let our Grangers take this matter in hand, and see that the Public Fund encourages the producers, not only of the team, but of the load which necessitates the team.

EDITOR HERALD: This "Fair" question is not exactly "my funeral," but still, as the controversy is opened, every sovereign has the right to express an opinion. My opinion is that the racing was first-rate, and that the Fair was an absolute blirk—a fraud upon the farmers, producers and mechanics of the District. It was a positive disgrace to the county of Los Angeles. I have attended fairs for twenty years in this State, when county fairs were in vogue, and I say it without fear of contradiction, that this Los Angeles exhibition was the poorest and most neglected institution of the kind that I have ever seen in this State, or in any county of distant thereof.

It will be better for Los Angeles and her farmers that she never make another exhibition unless upon a greatly improved scale.

With her sunny climate, her broad acres of more fertile soil, her rivers, her magnificent vineyards, orchards and orange groves, she cannot afford to be the tail-end of all the counties in the State, as ostensively shown by representation in this kind of an Agricultural Fair. No one need be afraid of this discussion hurting Los Angeles half as much as fairs of the kind just held. This discussion is the mode of rectifying the evil. It is not necessary for any one to be personal or charge the omission to this one or that one, only let us have it better next time. This communication was not manufactured in the HERALD office.

A BIT OF HISTORY. The Sacramento Record of the 7th tells the following: In the Spring of 1857 Charles A. Stovall, a citizen of Mississippi, being in delicate health, determined on a trip to California across the plains. He brought with him his body servant, a negro boy 19 years of age. Stovall did not start out with the intention of remaining in California, and in October, 1857, he arrived in Sacramento. When he got there he hired his servant out for a month. Stovall opened a school in this city, which he taught for two months. At the end of that time Stovall concluded to send the servant home, and for that purpose took him on a river steamer for San Francisco, intending to ship him by the ocean route, but the negro made his escape from the boat. Stovall made an affidavit before a Justice of the Peace, who issued him a warrant and a police officer of Sacramento arrested him in the Hackett House, kept by colored people, on Third street, between K and L, and turned him over to James Lansing, then Chief of Police, of this city, who locked him up in the city prison. At 2 o'clock the next morning James Robinson issued a writ of habeas corpus, directed to Lansing and Stovall, and on petition of Chas. W. Parker, Crocker & McKune appeared as attorneys, Smith & Hardy opposing. Judge Boker heard the case, and was continued a day or two. Meanwhile Stovall filed a petition with United States Commissioner Geo. Penn Johnston, calling on him to enforce the Fugitive Slave Law. William & Crocker appeared for the slave in reply, and insisted on dismissal of the petition. Johnston took time to consult Hall McAllister, United States Circuit Judge, and in a few days referred the case back to the State Courts. For two weeks the slave lay in jail, when Judge Johnson released the prisoner, and held his master in contempt of court. But Lansing detained the negro and refused to deliver him to Stovall, who petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus for the recovery of his slave. James H. Hardy, appeared as counsel for Stovall, and J. W. Winans for the slave. The case meanwhile had excited great interest, and the whole people were aroused concerning it. It was the subject of warm comment by the press, and gave rise to many heated scenes. The case was brought to the attention of the Supreme Court, and the Chief Justice concurred. The Court held that visitors for health or pleasure stood in a different position from travelers, and were protected by the law of Comity. The Court concluded Stovall was neither visitor nor traveler, but that there were circumstances connected with the case exempting him from the operation of the strict rules, and although the rules of the decision would be strictly enforced thereafter, for that case Stovall would be protected in his property, and the Chief was required to surrender the negro to his master. He was escorted by a strong force of police from the Court room to prison, and three times tried to escape into the crowd that surrounded him. The next day Officer O'Neil was detailed to accompany Stovall, and the negro, heavily ironed, was taken in a wagon out of the city, a "rescue" being anticipated. The next heard of the matter was when Stovall and the negro were the next boat on San Francisco bay, the boy ironed to the front of the yawl and the master trying to get him on the steamer, while an excited crowd was on the wharf. A writ of habeas corpus was sworn out, an officer sent out and the slave taken from his master and carried to the City Hall, an immense crowd following him. The writ was heard by Judge Freelon a week later, Judge Hardy and Colonel James appearing for the master, and Colonel E. D. Baker, E. O. Crosby and W. H. Tompkins for the slave. On a motion to dismiss the warrant of arrest as a fugitive, Judge F. denied it, and Stovall set the negro at liberty, and at once had him re-arrested by the United States Marshal as a fugitive slave, and George Price and the case were again brought before him. Meanwhile the negro sued Stovall for $2,500 damages for imprisonment and beating. The case lingered for weeks, exciting greater interest all the time. Witnesses were brought from the wharf and the trial was attended by an immense crowd. Finally, early in April Johnston decided the case and released Archie Lee, holding he was not a fugitive slave. All this was 15 years ago, and in that interim Archie Lee drops out of sight. Yesterday some boys were playing in the sand on the Yolo shore opposite the mouth of the American river when they discovered a man buried in the sand, only his head protruding. They gave the alarm, and the man was dug out and brought to the station house in this city. Arriving there he was found to be sick, and said he had covered himself up in the sand to keep warm. He was sent to the County Hospital. He was the hero of one of the most exciting times of 15 years ago, the slave Archie Lee. His career in this state began here, and here it seems likely to end.
