ABOUT BEARDS.

The history of a beard is interesting; for next to a man's head is his hair; and by the philologist's rule "hairs are humanum." It is at least worth talking about. It is remarkable that fashion should be so capricious about beards as bonnets. Excepting a few cases of conceit, or, from the time of Moses until now, to have controlled the style of beards with a usual despotism. The Jews, indeed, wore their beards with religious care, and considered it in the last degree humiliating to be shaven. It was the same in the early days of Christianity, and the Saviour and all the Apostles save one, are represented as wearing long beards, which we know to have been the custom of their times. John alone appears in the pictures without a beard, a deprivation which contributes a good deal to that effeminate look which the painters have always given him. With the Greeks and Romans the fashion was changed; and it was also with the Saxons. The Greeks usually wore their beards, except when in mourning. The Romans, on the contrary, let their beards grow as a sign of sorrow. (Cæsar Augustus) is related to have trimmed his beard in a fashion of his own, and once to have cut it off. Alexander the Great reckoned his own beard an ornament, but ordered his soldiers to be shaven because he said the beard "gave a handle" to the enemy who could thus the more easily cut off their heads. The history of the beard in England is not so interesting, and shows as many vicissitudes as there have been political mutations—every imaginable style having been in and out of vogue since the time of the Heptarchy. On the whole, however, beards of some form have carried it against the barbers. In the reign of Henry I the full beard was in fashion, though the clergy denounced it as "immoral." We have not seen their authorities; but they were probably metaphysical, and about as fine spun as the old question of the schoolmen, "de lana caprina." In the reign of Richard Coeur de Lion, shaving was again practiced, and the great mass of English knights, and the custom changed before the dynasty, and beards were worn as before. In King John's time, some wore beards, some moustaches, and others shaved the whole face; exactly the same diversity prevailing under John's reign as under the reign of Victoria. A similar license of custom obtained in the reign of Edward II, though old men and men of high rank were, for the most part, unshaven. Edward III was distinguished by a long, flowing beard, and of course shaving was deemed bad taste by all loyal subjects. During the reign of Henry V, Englishmen generally shaved their chins, but wore moustaches—Henry VIII went beyond that, and in his usual despotism, commanded the court to follow his example. "Bloody Mary" looked upon beards with favor, and none were cut off during her reign except by decapitation. All her favorites, dukes, cardinals and bishops, have come down to us in their portraits with long beards. "Queen Bess" was equally partial to beards and moustaches; which took during her reign the most varied and fantastic forms. In the time of Charles I, beards began to go out of fashion, but were restored with the restoration of Charles II. Whiskers and moustaches continued in vogue for a while but soon gave way to the razor; and presently universal shaving prevailed throughout the kingdom. It is observable that in the matter of beards the puritan has been as changeable as the cavalier. Cromwell and his psalm singing soldiers wore the fiercest kind of moustache; and John Knox thundered against pope and cardinal through a beard of patriarchal exuberance. The "Pilgrim Fathers," too, were fond of hair with a reasonable trimming, and saw no unfitness in wearing an appendage which God had made. But the fashion changed after a while, and for many years, until quite lately, a clergyman who should have so much as ventured on a whisker, would have been deemed both profane and heretical, and would probably have lost his clerical head for his hair! Such are the freaks of fashion in a matter of more moment, one would think, than the cut of a coat or the shape of a shoe—since nature is beyond art and the work of God of more certain worth than any device of man. But we do not propose a philosophical, much less a theological dissertation on beards. We will hazard the assertion, however, that what may be called the "natural" and the philosophical arguments in their favor, have not yet been answered. It may be added that the beard is a distinguishing mark of manhood; and it has been hinted that the beard is the seat of the sense of shame, indicated by all "strong-minded women, from Mary Walstoncraft to Lucy Stone. It is asserted also that only those who have shaved many years, and thus stimulated an unnatural growth of hair, find their beards (when at last permitted to grow long), coarse, harsh and inconvenient. This is probably true; but it may fairly be doubted, in such cases, whether it is not better to keep on shaving, in respect to appearance, than to let the beard grow so considerably worse for their beards—such as they are. The exceptional man is sometimes the bandsome for his hair. On the whole, we are of the opinion that the strength of the argument lies on the hirsute side of the question. Meanwhile we shall continue to patronize the barber as heretofore.—Boston Post.

AROLD, ap 20 Merchant Tailor, No. 97 King st.

THE GREAT SOUTHERN CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT AS FLOURISHING AS EVER.—I beg leave to announce to my friends in this city and abroad, that I am now daily receiving a large stock of READY MADE CLOTHING, which, having been manufactured to my special order at the North, I am enabled to guarantee them for good, durable, and well made Clothing, which I can sell at Northern prices, and cheaper than any other establishment in this city. Country merchants would do well, before purchasing elsewhere, to call and examine my well selected stock of Clothing, which, when well adapted to the season, will sell at Alexandria retail prices. I have, also, on my last visit to the North, made arrangements for manufacturing Clothing to measure, at the shortest notice; which, for neatness, fashion, and durability, will defy competition. In the Furnishing line, I am supplied from the first manufacturers, and am always kept posted as to the latest styles of Clothing. Gentlemen's SHIRTS made to order, and warranted to fit, or no sale. All I ask is a trial. Remember the well-known "GREAT SOUTHERN CLOTHING HOUSE," No. 100 King street, opposite Sarepta Hall. SIMON WATERMAN, ap 5—y
