WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12.

[COMMUNICATED.]

"THE BIBLE, as a very curious and ancient history, is on that account worthy our attention. We were the Bible but considered impartially and attentively in its most advantageous lights; as it contains all the written revelation of God's will now extant; as it is the basis of our religion; and gives vigor and spirit to all our social laws; as it is the most ancient and consequently the most venerable of historical incidents; as moral precepts, and political institutions; as the style of it is, in some places, nobly sublime and poetical, and in others sweetly natural, plain and unaffected; in a word, as the being well acquainted with it is highly requisite in order to make men useful and ornamental in this life, to say nothing of their happiness in the next, it is to be hoped, that a cool reflection on two of this sort might induce the more ingenious and rational among them, to let the BIBLE take its turn in their riper years, among those volumes which pass through their hands either for amusement or instruction. And should such an entertainment once become fashionable, of what mighty service would it be to the interests of religion, and consequently to the happiness of mankind!"
