Gen. John B. Magruder.

This warrior sleeps the sleep of a soldier in a rude Texas grave, over which there is no monument. Magruder was a wonderful man. He stood six feet four inches in height, and had a form men envied and women adored. His nerves were all iron. Foreign travel and comprehensive culture had given to his wit a zest that was always crisp and sparkling. He never lacerated. To the sting of a repartee he added the honey of the clover. He could fight all day and dance all night. In the morning a glass of brandy and a strong cigar renewed his strength and caused the cup of his youth to run over with the precious wine of health and high spirits. He loved magnificent uniforms, magnificent horses, magnificent riders, and magnificent women.

Gifted and graceful in conversation, he was a pet in the boudoir and a logician in the barracks. He had studied French in Paris, Italian in Rome, and Spanish in the halls of the Montezumas. The sabre exercise he learned from a Turk. His horsemanship was of the English kind. This is to say, not graceful but impossible to be surpassed for firm riding and endurance. He wrote little love songs that were set to music; one of them, "Inogene," had in it the plaintive melody of a lover and the sad rhythm of burial bugles.

In the Crimea he astonished the French officers by sleeping at the front with the chasseurs under fire. In Mexico he sent back to his archbishop a lady's perturbed glove he had found in his palace when the city was won and with it a note which read: "It is pretty enough to have belonged to a Queen. Would she have pardoned me if I had appropriated it?" As the archbishop sent him the next day a basket of delicious wine, it is supposed that the fair owner of the glove must have looked leniently upon the handsome American soldier. Later, and he was riding with Gen. Scott down the long street of Iturbide. Gen. Garnett joined them, and Magruder drew a little back for his superiors to confer together. A white puff of smoke curled out from an open window, a sudden report followed speedily, and Garnett and horse fell hard and bloody. An ounce ball, intended for Scott, had broken Garnett's thigh, and killed his charger. Seeing another fire, Magruder galloped to the side of his chief and covered his body with his own. The old man's eyes never dropped, nor his voice changed an intonation.

"How long will it take you to batter down that house?" he spoke curiously to Lieutenant Magruder, pointing with a sweep of his finger to the one nearest and from which the bullet came. "An hour by the watch, general." "Then open fire at point-blank range, and leave not one stone upon another."

It was done, and well done, and those who saw Magruder soon afterwards noticed that he had another bar on his epaulettes—he had been made a captain. War was his element, the bivouac his delight, and the battle his perfect happiness. Besides, prodigal, fashionable, foolishly brave sometimes, a spendthrift, generous, a true friend and staunch comrade, the surrender at Appomattox made him an aged man in his prime, and wrinkled his features, which had before resisted all the attacks of time.

One who wandered far and long with him in other lands, in sweet sunny weather, relates how from Vera Cruz to Chapultepec, he went with Magruder all over the battle-fields of the Mexican war. The light came back to his eyes, and the fire to his face, when telling of Contreras and Churubusco, and Perote, and Molino del Rey, and the Belen Gate and Chapultepec, and the City of Mexico. His talk was never ended of Scott and Twiggs, Wool and Worth, Smith and Pillow, Taylor and Quitman, and all the young subordinates, who afterwards played such bloody parts in the greatest of American dramas. Of McClellan he told this incident among a thousand: The fire from the hill of Chapultepec was terrible. Fifty pieces of heavy artillery were massed against my four-gun battery at point-blank range, and in the valley below a regiment of Lancers were forming for a charge. Our fire had been slackened and the men were lying down. A young man sat beside one of the guns amusing himself with picking up pebbles and shooting them out from his hand. The Lancers came nearer; I called to the young officer whom I had noticed, and he sprang up shouting, "Your name?" "Lieut. George B. McClellan." "Very well, Lieutenant. Take command of one of these guns and disperse those Lancers." The gunners rushed to their pieces. All the great cannons about Chapultepec went to roaring. The battle began anew. Worth was sweeping up the acclivity, the Lancers were routed, and the next I saw of McClellan he was smoking a cigarette in the palace of Santa Anna, his face as black as a powder keg, and an ugly wound in his arm.

What a book his life would make in the hands of some men. He once intended to write an autobiography. Whether it was begun or not, we do not know—most certainly it was never finished.

The "Black Crook"—The "Black Crook" is one of the most memorable of dramatic successes. It is an error to suppose that the prosperity of this production was due to the mercenary attraction of its incidental ballets, in point of fact, that feature of the production was deemed itself, compared with the scanty dancing and voluptuous posing of the Montplaisir Troupe, which visited this country in 1850, or of the Rouzant Troupe of 1856. The "Crook" succeeded principally because in all essential features of spectacular display, its dazzling pictorial effects, its superb costumes, its beautiful groupings, its exquisite contrasts of color, and its splendid combinations of lights, it was the grandest and most graceful nageant known to the American stage. Its cost did not exceed in actual outlay $15,000, yet compared with all previous theatrical experiences, that outlay seemed fabulous. Its aggregate profits may reasonably be estimated at about $175,000, which were equally shared by the three managers, Messrs. Wheatley, Palmer and Jarrett. To the latter well-known Baltimorean is chiefly due the credit of originating the production.

The "Crook" had a "run" of 405 consecutive performances, and was immediately followed by "The White Fawn," a far more expensive production. But sequels seldom if ever attain to the success of the original work, and "The Fawn," after an unprosperous career of 173 performances, was finally withdrawn. It occasioned the managers a loss of at least $30,000.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The symptoms of Liver Complaint are uneasiness and pain in the side. Sometimes the pain is in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness, bowels in general constive, sometimes alternating with laxation, considerable loss of memory, accompanied with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. Often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the liver is generally the organ most involved. Cure the liver with

YOUNG MEN.
Especially, who have become the Victims of Solitary Vice, and dreadful and destructive habits, which annually sweep to an untimely grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have attained lasting Renown with the numbers of objects, or waded to extirpate the living vice, may call with full confidence.

The system becomes deranged, the Physical and Mental Functions weakened, Loss of Procreative Power, Nervous Irritability, Impotency, Palpitation of the Heart, Indigestion, Constitutional Debility and Wasting of the Frame, Cough, Consumption, Deceit and Death.

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London, Graduate of one of the most eminent Colleges in the United States, and the greater part of whose life has been spent in the hospitals of London, Paris, Philadelphia and elsewhere, has effected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known; many troubled with ringing in the head and ears, which, without great nervousness, being alarmed at sudden sounds, headachings, with frequent blushing attended sometimes with derangement of mind, were cured immediately.

TAKEN PARTICULAR NOTICE.
Dr. J. addresses all those who have injured themselves by improper indulgence and solitary habits, which ruin both body and mind, uniting them for either business, study, society or marriage.
