The Wife that He brought from Town.
BY JOHN H. YATES.

A very fine day for the auction, sir! There is quite a crowd out, too. Guess things will sell for a good round price, as the most of 'em are new; I don't mind seein' a few old traps sold off, at the hammer's blow. But 'twill kinder make my heart ache, sir, to see the old farm go.

"You look like a stranger in these parts! Have you come up here to buy? A Yankee must ask questions, sir, if he don't 'twill surely die. Would you like to know the reason why this fine farm must be sold? Well, sit down here and I'll tell again the tale I've so often told.

"You see I have known Charley Jones for years; in fact ever since he was born. When a little shaver he used to come to help in my field of corn; I took to likin' the young chap, then, as he sat a huskin' the ears. And the friendship formed in the old corn-field grew stronger with the passin' years.

"'Twasn't drinkin' and gamin', nor any such thing that brought Charley down to this; He shakes his thirst at the old farm spring, that the wild flowers stoop to kiss; And the only gamin' that Charley does—or has, from his childhood done— Is a huntin' the squirrels, down in the woods, with his faithful dog and his gun.

"His good old mother—now dead and gone—brought him up in the way he should go; She pictured but, as a mother can, the broad road that leads to woe; Charley often says, as he struggles hard, 'neath the heavy load of his cares. That his hands would drop, and his heart give up, but for thought of his mother's prayers.

"The truth is, stranger—and those who know have a long time marked it down— The loss of the farm is the fault of the wife he had brought up here from town; Her studied ways, and her woinin' smiles, flung around his heart a charm; He married her for her pretty face, and she married him for the farm.

"Charley saw his mistake in a very short time; she couldn't make a loaf of bread, And she didn't want to use her lily-white hands to shake up a farmer's bed; She was crazy to read all the love-lick trash that she bought at the stores for a dime, And if Charley had a button that he wanted sewed on, she couldn't find needle nor time.

"She soon grew tired of a farmer's life; the sniles were put off for a frown; She sighed for the ball and the concert room; for the bustle and show of the town; Charley still loved her with patient love; he humored her every whim. Though something kept whisperin' in his ear that she loved pleasure more than him.

"Thus things went on for a year or two; each month his affairs grew worse; To supply her real and imagined wants drew heavy on Charley's purse; At last, when he came from his work one night long after the sun was down, She declared, with a stamp of her pretty foot, he must buy her a house in town.

"So a house he bought on a pleasant street, and fitted it up to a charm; But to pay for this village paradise he must mortgage his dear old farm; How strange, you know, that the folks in town are all nearly taxed to death; For they are taxed for the street, for the light, for their feet, they are almost taxed for their breath.

"Charley found this out in a very short time; his heart was soon filled with alarm; For with taxes and interest and keepin' up style, he said, he must lose his farm; When he talked about sellin' the house in town his wife firmly answered 'No!' The mortgage is due, his money is gone; and now the old farm must go.

The women are lecturin' about their rights; they are raising a hull-la-laloo! This woman of Charley's got her's I think, and most of her husband's too. Charley knows two things that he didn't know once; that a woman's will is strong, and that runnin' debt to keep up style is a poor way to get along.

"So, you see, 'twasn't drinkin' nor any such thing that brought Charley down to this; He will miss his drink from the old farm spring that the wild flowers stooped to kiss! I hate to see him walkin' around the farm with his head cast down; And I hate, worse than pizon, that wife of his that he brought up here from town."

BLACK HOGS.—A correspondent of the Michigan Farmer says: "The principal objection to the Essex and Berkshire breed of hogs I find to be their color. Now, as Youatt justly observes this is not even 'skin deep.' The coloring matter will be found secreted between the true skin and the epidermis or outer skin. If care is taken in scalding black hogs they can be dressed as white as any hogs. It is a well known principle that all black substances absorb heat. Hence in dressing black hogs, the water should not be so hot as in scalding white ones. If this simple rule is observed there will be no difficulty in dressing black hogs. Instead of this being an objection I regard it as an advantage, for the skin of black hogs will always be found to be smooth and glossy, free from cutaneous eruptions, and always clear."

RESTORING WHITE FLANNEL.—To restore the original appearance of white flannel which has turned yellowish by lying for a long time or by wear, soak for an hour in a weak solution of bisulphite of soda; then add a little dilute muriatic acid; stir well, and cover the vessel for twenty minutes. After this, take the flannel out, rinse in plenty of water, and dry in the sun. The flannel will be purely white.

A GOOD LINIMENT.—One of the best liniments that was ever made for man or beast is composed of equal parts of laudanum, alcohol, and oil of wormwood. Its effect is almost magical.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

The symptoms of Liver Complaint are uneasiness and pain in the side. Sometimes the pain is in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness, bowels in general constipated, sometimes alternating with laxity. Often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the liver is generally the organ most involved. Cure the Liver with
