The Horse Disease.

When a special and unusual disease occurs among men, it is called an Epidemic, from two Greek words, Epi upon, and demos the people; and when a special and unusual disease makes its appearance among inferior animals, it is called, Epizootic, also from two Greek words, Epi upon, and zoon animal. Hence the presently is called Epizootic, just as small-pox is called Epidemic. The distemper now prevalent among horses, is Influenza or Epizootic Catarrh; and it is typified by the peculiar nature, form and degree of the violence of the disease. Unfrequent diseases are decided to be mild or malignant, according to the number of deaths resulting from them; and when a prevailing disease readily yields to proper treatment, and not many die from it, it is said to be mild, but if it is not very submissive to treatment and many cases terminate fatally, it is considered malignant. As comparatively few horses have died, and a great many recovered, the Epizootic under consideration, may be safely termed mild, and possesses none of that virulence which marked the visitation of the same disease during the years of 1826 and 1840. Correspondents of newspapers have invested this malady with mysterious names, and thereby, distracted public attention from an intelligent understanding of its true character and importance.

The disease is undoubtedly contagious or catching, and is easily communicated from one horse to another, though not from the horse to man. It is very much influenced by the weather, and by far the greater number of cases occur during a cold wet spell. The disease commences in the horse just as what is called a severe cold begins in man, and like a severe cold, may be more or less severe, and soon get better, or go on from bad to worse, having the constitution or soundness of each horse that it attacks, to give it a respective character. Horses whose lungs and air passages are sound, usually bear the disease best, while those which have suffered previously with inflammation of the organs of respiration suffer most when attacked by it. In mild cases the horse is feverish, indolent, and has a cough which is distinct but not very loud. The attack may be so slight that the groom scarcely notices anything wrong with the horse until a prevalent discharge from the nose reveals the nature of the attack. But unfortunately the disease is not always so mild, and too frequently assumes a bold and terrible appearance from the very beginning. When it thus sets in, it comes on with a chill or severe shivering, which is immediately followed by quickness of the circulation of the blood and general fever. The mucous membrane of the nose becomes hot and dry, and the eyes are red and weeping, and cough soon announces the irritation of the windpipe and lungs. Soreness of the throat is evidenced by early and continuing coughing, and his breathing is quick and audible, and his flanks heave in consequence of the distress and pain which is diminished, or entirely lost, accompanied by early and remarkably well-marked debility, arising from both oppression and depression of the nervous energy, and before the expiration of the second day, if the horse is moved from his position, he staggers as he walks. If he gets down, he is unable to stand upon his feet when he is forced to make the effort to do so. There is heat and some swelling about the glands of the jaws, but no enlargement of any consequence. It is entirely a disease of the organs of breathing, and the mucous membrane of the nose, mouth, throat, windpipe bronchial tubes, and the substance of the lungs are all more or less implicated in the general inflammation; and when this ensues, the disease takes on its most fearful form, and so great is the prostration that it is impossible to tell whether or not the animal will live from one day to another. About the second day after the beginning of the cough, a puslike discharge begins to flow from the nostrils.

This is sometimes fetid, and very profuse and tenacious, and adds to the difficulty of breathing through the nostrils; and as the air passes through it into and out of the lungs, gives rise to a loud and continuous rattling. The limbs become cold, painful and stiff, and of an greatly swollen; and the feet are tender and not unlike their condition in founder. The duration of the disease is about two weeks; and in this time, the horse either gets rapidly better or sinks and dies before the expiration of a week, and if the disease does not terminate either in resolution or death within these periods, the disease is apt to proceed for an uncertain period, until the irritation becomes so general or extensive, that it is almost a matter of impracticability to tell which part of him is most diseased.

The treatment of both the mild and severe form of the disease, is a matter of great importance; and upon its correctness will depend a favorable or unfavorable termination of the case. The owner of a horse suffering with the disease, must do for the animal that which he would do for himself, or advise his friend to do, either laboring under a severe influenza, viz: Stop his business, and place himself in the best possible condition to avoid those influences or causes which would likely lead to an increase of the disease, and augment its danger. The disease is always sudden in its attack; and in mild cases, nothing more is necessary than to put the horse in a comfortable stable, protect his body by a blanket, and do not allow his stable door to open in a manner that will expose him to a north-east wind. Give him, once or twice a day a mash made by pouring hot water upon bran, a little cut hay, and plenty of gruel, with but little or no water. All his drinks should be as warm as he will take them, and a bucket of gruel should be kept constantly by his side in order to allow him to drink at pleasure. All the best stable fixtures, as it is called, and the discharge makes its appearance about the nostrils. The heat and tightness about the nose is very much relieved, by rubbing the face, from the eyes to the nostrils, with lard or common oil, and allowing the horse to inhale, from a nose-bag steam produced by pouring boiling water upon bran. Squeezing to clear the nose, may be excited by blowing a little red-pepper into the nostrils. This treatment may be continued once or twice a day until the horse begins to convalesce; and a gradual return to the horse's accustomed diet and exercise may be commenced, but great care must be taken of him until every symptom has disappeared, and if the owner values his horse, he must be as careful of him as reason would teach him to be of himself upon getting well of a similar disease.

A severe case is nothing more than an aggravation or excess of the violence of the symptoms of a mild case, and as remarked before, typified by the peculiar constitution of the horse. In almost all cases of inflammation of the different parts of the animal body, the abstraction of blood is a valuable remedy; but in this disease, it must be resorted to with such caution that bleeding cannot safely be trusted to ignorant hands, or to those who do not know enough to tell its effect upon the pulse; but in cases which show severe internal inflammation, three or four pounds of blood may be taken with good effect. The blood must be withdrawn from a large opening in the vein, and closed immediately after the requisite quantity has been obtained. Next to bleeding, and frequently superior to it, comes tartar emetic. Of all medicines this is the most valuable in the treatment of diseases of the air passages. It should be given twice a day, in combination with the following medicines: Powdered salt petre, 120 grains; tartar emetic, 30 grains; powdered clove leaves, 30 grains; powdered chlorate of potash, 60 grains. These articles are to be mixed into one powder. Each article readily dissolves in water. The most convenient way to give the powder is to put it into a pint bottle filled with water, and shake the bottle well before giving the contents. A dozen of these powders, given two each day, will be all that the horse may need, and after he begins to get better, one a day will be all sufficient for him. This should be continued until his cough is cured. This powder is as appropriate for the complications, as for the disease itself, and this treatment, or one similar to it, is all that human science can do for the suffering animal.

Most respectfully,
J. B. JOHNSON, M. D.
ALEXANDRIA, VA., Nov. 11, 1872.

I ventured on Sunday to Washington, and was surprised to see so many sick invalids of the hard-working horses. I am sympathetic and would like to free them of their complaint. On inquiring, I learned they all were affected. After deliberating on the displeasure of the owners and inconvenience of the public, I commenced with myself as follows: This is a cold; the horses cough; they appear weak and have not much inclination to eat;—if so, the intestine is lined with a phlegm which prevents the body from receiving nourishment which the food in common gives, and through the same cause their appetite is diminished. But what is the cause of such a general disease among horses? Is it epidemic? I think not; the early part of the year, when the grass was commonly dry, therefore, the hay must be uncommoaly dry; it is of smaller bulk but stronger quality, and all horses which were fed on this hay, will be affected. But why are cattle not affected? Because the same food the cattle eat will produce more heat in the intestines of the horse than in the cattle; besides, the cattle run at large and are not so thoroughly fed on hay; if so, horses running at large must be free of the disease. Now next; what will be the cure? Give the patient glycerine, which is warming and moistening, and by its penetrating tendencies it will loosen the phlegm throughout the intestines and causes the same to be carried off; besides, it has healing qualities, and the horse will admire the test. At the same time feed the horse on fodder which was made in the fall. After the first dose of glycerine, the patient will cough less, show more spirit, and in the course of a week or so, will be all right. EDWARD SCHULER.

THE DISSIPATION OF THE HORSE DISEASE.—The long agony of the horses is promised an early relief by the same medium through which their sorrows came. The pestilence has been distinctly traced to the torrid descent upon all Eastern America of that immense current of frigid northeasterly wind from the Greenland seas that is so apt to set in after the Autumnal equinox. The Signal Office reports of Thursday night indicated in advance the setting in of a very different class of winds, and show that in the Northwest and over the lakes the great continental winds, with their pure and vitalizing influence, are now moving in one grand band across the whole country, from the Upper Mississippi River to the Atlantic seaboard. If this air, as the most eminent medical geographers maintain, is a corrective both of the malarial southerly winds from the Gulf of Mexico and of the northeasterly winds from Canada and the western basin of the North Atlantic. The ushering in of this refreshing and delicious atmosphere is due to the violent tempest which has just passed over the regions north of the lakes, and verifies the poet's conception—

Not more propitious the Favian breeze
To nature's health than purifying storms.
In 1780 the sugar disease, which raged in the West Indies, was suddenly terminated by the movement of a torrid hurricane. An English historian tells us that the worst visitation of the fatal sweating sickness ever known in England was removed by a strong tempest, and thus, to the joy of the whole nation, the epidemic was swept away without leaving a trace behind; and an Almighty arm accomplished what man had signally failed with all his appliances, to overcome.

The northwestern winds of our Continent, which, in Summer and in Winter, are equally sanitary and delicious, come to us through that vast and open gateway from the high north stretching over the plains of Dakota and Minnesota—the true home of the invalid debilitated by Southern malaria and often the resort of the consumptive—and are free from humidity and the carbon of decayed Autumnal vegetation. The present change in the meteorological or chemical conditions of the air will be hailed with gratitude by man and beast. To the horses the change will be "as good news from a fair country."—Nov York Herald.

MEDICAL.

BALTO. LOCK HOSPITAL.
DR. JOHNSTON.
Physician of this celebrated institution, has discovered the most Certain, Speedy, Pleasant and Effectual Remedy in the world for all
DISEASES OF IMPRUDENCE.

Weakness of the Back or Limbs, Strictures, Affection of the Kidneys or Bladder, Involuntary Discharges, Impotency, General Debility, Nervousness, Dyspepsia, Languor, Low Spirits, Confusion of Ideas, Palpitation of the Heart, Timidity, Trembling, Dimness of Sight, or Giddiness, Disease of the Head, Throat, Nose or Skin, Affections of the Liver, Lungs, Stomach or Bowels—those terrible Disorders arising from Solitary Habits of Youth—secret and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than the songs of the Syrens to the Mariners of Ulysses, blighting their most brilliant hopes or anticipations, &c.

YOUNG MEN.
Especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, and are afflicted with destructive habits which annually sweep to an untimely grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have embraced listening Senates with the thunders of eloquence, or walked to extinction the living lyre, may call with full confidence.

MARRIAGE.
Married persons, or Young Men contemplating marriage, aware of Physical Weakness, Loss of Procreative Power—Impotency, Nervous Excitability, Palpitation, Trembling, Weakness, Nervous Debility, or any other Disqualification, speedily relieved.
He who places himself under the care of Dr. J. may religiously confide in his honor as a gentleman, and confidently rely upon his skill as a physician.

ORGANIC WEAKNESS.
Immediately cured and Full Vigor Restored.
This distressing Affection—which renders life miserable and marriage impossible—is the penalty paid by the victims of impure indulgence, who, not being aware of the dreadful consequences that may ensue. Now, who that understands the subject will pretend to deny that the natural powers are lost through the indulgence in the most dissipated habits? Besides being deprived of the pleasure of healthy offspring, the most serious and destructive symptoms of both body and mind arise. The system becomes deranged, the Physical and Mental Functions weakened, the Procreative Power Nervous, Irritability, Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the Heart, Indigestion, Constitutional Debility, and Wasting of the Frame, Cough, Consumption, Decay and Death.

A CURE WARRANTED IN TWO DAY
Relief in Six Hours! No Mercury!
Persons ruined by Ignorant, Trifling Pretenders and their Deadly Poison, should apply immediately.
DR. JOHNSTON.
Member of the Royal College of Surgery of London, Graduate of one of the most eminent Colleges in the United States, and the greater part of whose life has been spent in the hospitals of London, Paris, Philadelphia and elsewhere, has effected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known; many troubled with ringing in the head and ears when asleep, great nervousness, being alarmed at sudden sounds, bashfulness, with frequent blushing attended sometimes with derangement of mind, were cured immediately.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE.
Dr. J. addresses all those who have injured themselves by intemperance and solitary habits, which ruin both body and mind, uniting them for other business, study, society or marriage.
These are some of the sad and melancholy effects produced by the early habits of youth, viz: Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Pains in the Head, Dimness of Sight, Loss of muscular Power, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irritability, Derangement of the Digestive Functions, General Debility, Symptoms of Consumption, &c.

MENTALLY.—The fearful effects on the mind are much to be dreaded. Loss of Memory, Confusion of Ideas, Depression of Spirits, Evil Forebodings, Aversion to Society, Self Distrust, Love of Solitude, Timidity, &c., are some of the evils produced.
Thousands of persons of all ages can now judge what is the cause of their declining health, losing their vigor, becoming weak, pale, nervous and emaciated, having a singular appearance about the eyes, cough and symptoms of Consumption.

MARRIAGE
Who have injured themselves by a certain practice, already described, a habit frequently learned from evil companions or at school, the effects of which are nightly felt, even when asleep, and comes a horrid, renders marriage impossible, and destroys both mind and body, should apply immediately.
What a pity that a young man, the hope of his country, the pride of his parents, should be snatched from all prospects and enjoyment of life by the consequence of deviating from the path of nature, and indulging in pernicious habits. Such persons must, before contemplating

DISEASES OF IMPRUDENCE.
When the misguided and imprudent votary of pleasure finds that he has imbibed the seeds of this painful disease, and that he has incurred a disordered sense of shame or dread of discovery detour him from applying to those who, from education and respectability, can alone benefit him, delaying till the constitutional symptoms of this horrid disease makes their appearance, such as ulcerated sores in the throat, nose, nocturnal pains in the head and limbs, dimness of sight, deafness, nodos on the shin bones and arms, blotches on the head, face and extremities, progressing with frightful rapidity, till at last the palate of the mouth or the bowels of the nose become a horrid object of commiseration till death puts a period to his dreadful suffering, by sending him to that undiscovered country "from whence no traveller returns."
It is a melancholy fact that thousands DIE victims to this terrible disease, through falling into the hands of ignorant or unskillful PRETENDERS, who, by the use of that deadly Poison, Mercury, &c., destroy the constitution, and incapable of curing, keep at home a sufferer notwithstanding, and their unhappy sufferer mortally wounded, and instead of being restored to a renewal of Life, Vigor and Happiness in despair leaves him with ruined Health, to sigh over his galling disappointment.
