SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 6, 1873.

A Brick House-Built in Ten Hours. This caption looks like it had the Munchausen streak, but it is nevertheless true. We have photographs of the house in its various stages of development...

This is one of the greatest exploits on record-no building having ever been erected in the same short space of time-from the ground floor to the roof inclusive, only occupying two and a half hours.

The Daily Examiner of Lancaster publishes an interesting account of the progress of work each hour, which to our usual poke-easy minds seems almost marvellous. Surely this is the age of progress, and when we read of the remarkable feats performed by our busy brethren of the north, we feel a deep regret for the existence of circumstances in our own blessed country which keeps us so far behind in the race of life.
