Centennial Ode.
Delivered at the late Centennial Celebration at Rockville, by Henry Hatfield, esq., formerly of this city, but now of Montgomery county, Maryland:
An Hundred Years! And Nature never old,
Still, day by day, orders her myria troops,
The sun rolls on in flaming splendor, from Air and earth and water, calling forth the Innumerable mysteries of life!
The moon glides grassy slope and wild ravine
And rests serene; All the stars of Heaven
Lies and set and rise again; Rivers flow,
Broom the drift and p-bbles from the far
Snow-mantled Mountains; Ocean's bosom
And sinks; The seasons change; And all
As in the years gone by.

A Century.
In the long ages of Creation's course,
Is but the flash of passing bird, the swing
Of pendulum, the ripple of a wave,
Ten thousand thousand years has Nature's force
Transformed the elements, and carrying on
A vast, diversified, ordained plan,
Prepared this home for occupation;
His emblems with beauties countless
As the glittering sands on Africa's desert.

And still through ages numberless to come
Will silent, slow, unerring energy
Work out new loveliness for coming man.
Wild hurricanes will sweep o'er earth; her
force
Will scum all scum and foam and bleeding;
To the perfect vision Chora returns:
Yet all is part of our grand scheme; for good,
As earth puts on her latest robe of green,
Bedecked with jewels, after summer storm.

But where are those who on the day which we,
With patriot instincts, celebrate, fulfilled
Their varied duties! The venerable
Sires long since have rested from their labors;
The staid men and noble mothers have Their life work to their kind, and sought to sleep;

The babe became a buoy boisterous boy,
Of romping girl with merry sparkling eyes,
And by degrees assumed the cares of life,
And toiled, and mourned, and smiled, then it
to sleep.

All who looked abroad that day on Nature,
Now rest beneath the swilling grassy waves
Of their last home.
But yet to us they live!
Man passes to his rest and seems to die
And be forgotten, but his deeds remain.
The learned tell us that there is no waste
Of force in Nature's wise economy—
That every motion is but vital power
Coeval with the origin of things.

So every act of kindness, every word
Of love, each gentle manifestation to
The wants and pains and sorrows of our kind,
Lives in a seedling race, a nobler life.
A virtuous and chivalric father,
Another true to noble womanhood,
Leave in successive ages far remove Traces of goodness and untiring worth.
No life so humble but it makes its mark
For good or ill, but helps to shape in slight
Degree, the form and manner of the age,
A grain by grain the tiny insect rears
The coral continents in tropic seas.

What is the lesson then for us to learn,
Looking through the long array of years
That stretch in hazy distance down the past!
Is it not to give aid and faith upon us,
Not satisfied to drift along
The stream of life, but taking up our work
Acknowledge each his debt to country, race?
Noble we commemorate the virtues
Of ancestral worth, by honest actions,
By elevated thoughts, by purer lives,
By gentle courtesy, by liberal deeds,
By earnest trust in virtue, valor, truth.

Altho' at times the outlook o'er the world
Is darkened by the prevalence of wrong;
Altho' the anxious heart grows faint and sick
While waiting the approach of brighter day;
Altho' the lover of his race will sigh
Dreads of man's regeneration; yet
Be certain as the light of coming dawn
Is progress to a higher, better life.

He who has watched from lofty mountain peak
The edifying of the mist that shrouds the valley,
Knows that its tresses mark a plastic power
That soon shall melt and drift, if icy clouds,
The radiant sun from the watery shore:
So shall the light of coming dawn
Be certain as the light of coming dawn
Is progress to a higher, better life.

Trust
We face the future, striving for the best,
And so offer to the coming years,
The cradle that begins to-day, our Hymn.

Hail! On new and happy time!
Welcome to this world of our!
Welcome to the Winter's time!
Welcome to the Summer flowers!
Thy no mortal eye may see
All the threads of joy and sorrow,
That diversify thy plan
As thou greatest each to-morrow;

Thy eyes that sparkle now,
Ere thy close may shut forever,
Gain the fair, the manly brow,
Gain the wreath that fadeth never;

Calmly in this thought we'll rest
While we humbly give the greeting—
All is ordered for the best,
Thus the work of life completing.

As the ages roll away,
Other forms in turn will meet thee,
Ere'er recesses, a brighter day,
Nobler scenes still will greet thee!
