Alexandria Gazette

TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 4.

An Extraordinary Case.

An exceedingly remarkable surgical operation has recently been completed at St. Catherine's Hospital, Williamsburg. On Friday, August 3, 1876, while Dora Conrad, of No. 340 Manassas street, was attending a jenny in Waterbury's bag factory, in Bushwick, her hair, which was hanging loose, caught in one of the spindles, and in an instant the hair and scalp on one side of her head were torn out. It was done so quickly that she only felt a tug. The overseer took her to St. Catherine's Hospital, on Bushwick avenue, where the doctors said they could not do anything for her. Two days after the physician in charge said, "I can save her, and if she can stand the operation I can give her a new scalp by transplantation."

The operation of transplantation of skin is an exceedingly delicate one, and has been but recently introduced into surgery as a remedy in cases of open wounds. The ghastly injury inflicted on Miss Conrad not only tore off the scalp, but destroyed a portion of the periosteum. No hopes were at first entertained for her recovery; but as the days wore on, her naturally good constitution enabled granulation to begin and flesh commenced to form. Taking advantage of this the doctor took two pieces from Dora's own arm, and, cutting them in small pieces, grafted them on the periosteum, about a quarter of an inch apart, and in a row about a quarter of an inch from the line of the lower edge of the wound, holding them in position with small strips of plaster. In a few days minute ramifications extended from these little grafts to each other, and to the sound skin, which gradually increased until they bridged over the space between them, and new skin was thus produced. This operation was carefully repeated during the seven months the girl lay in the hospital, the grafts for the purpose being freely furnished by Sister Dolores from her arms. Sister Joanna, another of the faithful nurses in the institution, also furnished material for grafts during the operation. The doctor was so skillful in his manipulations that every piece of skin grafted took root, and the entire skull was again covered with a firm, healthy, but hairless scalp. There are spots here of feeling; they are those connecting directly with the skull, the periosteum having been destroyed just there. There was danger of the upper table of the skull dying in these places, but, fortunately, the oil dressing prevented that.

The case excites much interest among the surgical profession. JEWISH RELIGIOUS MEASURES.—A convention of delegates from the association of American Israelites and the Union of American Congregations was held at New York on Sunday in the Forty-fourth street synagogue, to act on a report of a committee in regard to uniting the Eastern and Western Hebrew congregations of the United States, and providing for a national executive board of thirty members representing both bodies. The committee was appointed in a convention in Washington last July, and consisted of Simon Wolf, William H. Hackeburg, Isidor Bioswanger and the Rev. Geo. Jacobs. It was resolved to transmit the report to every congregation in the United States by means of a committee especially appointed for each, who would argue in favor of the measure and receive the suffrages of the members before May 1, 1878; also that members of the various committees should be appointed from the Jewish Men's Hebrew Associations and other Jewish societies, as well as from religious congregations. The object of the two societies representing the Jews of the Eastern and Western States has been to afford pecuniary assistance to Jews in need, to promote religious and schools for religious instruction, and to cooperate with Hebrew societies abroad in aiding Jews throughout the world. Both bodies have sent money to Jews of the Turkish provinces who have suffered by the war, and both have demonstrated against the political disabilities of Jews in Roumania and Bulgaria. The project of creating a Jewish college in a central place of the United States is also under consideration. A seminary preparatory to it exists already in Cincinnati, and it is thought that the college will be in that city.

THE PROPHET'S GRAVE.—On the twenty-ninth day of August last Brigham Young died. He was buried in a walled grave, built according to his direction, of granite, with iron rods binding its sides, ends and bottom, and an immense slab of granite to cover it, and bound in iron in connection with the rest. The slab is said to weigh several tons, and was put in place, was all the rock, with a large derrick. It was, no doubt, the determination of the prophet to sleep the long sleep of death undisturbed by his enemies. In addition to this, watchers day and night, living at first in tents almost over the grave, have been in constant attendance, and now a house has been completed, and these custodians of the prophet's ashes occupy it, and never leave the spot. What danger there can possibly be in leaving this grave, when no ten men could open or create it in a day's time, it is hard to divine.—Inter-Ocean.
