How It Was Cured.

Probably the meanest trick that was ever played on a white man was played last week in this city, and the fact that there is no vigilance committee here is the only reason the perpetrators of the trick are alive. A business man had just purchased a new stiff hat, and went into a saloon with half a dozen friends to get the hat to his head. They all took beer, and passed the hat around so all could see it. One of the meanest men that ever held a cony office went to the bar tender and had a thin slice of limber cheese cut off, and when the party were looking at the frosted ceiling through beer glasses, this wicked person slipped the cheese under the sweat leather of the hat, and the man put it on and walked out. The man who owned the hat is one of your nervous people, who is always complaining of being sick, and who feels as though some dreadful disease was going to take possession of him and carry him off. He went back to his place of business, took off his hat and laid it on the table and proceeded to answer some letters. He thought he detected a smell, and when his partner asked him if he didn't feel sick, he said he believed he did. A cock said it was evident that somebody's feet were being washed. The man turned pale, and said he guessed he would get home and take some All-thero's tonic, so he had always help'd him.

He met a man on the sidewalk who said the air was full of miasma, and in the street car a man who sat next to him moved away to the end of the car, and asked him if he had just come from Chilesco. The man with the hat said he had not, when the stranger said they were having a good deal of smelt-pox there, and he guessed he would get out and walk, and he pulled the bell and jumped off. The cold perspiration broke out on the forehead of the man with the new hat, and he took it off to wipe his forehead when the whole piece of cheese seemed to roll over and breathe, and the man got the full benefit of it, and he came near fainting away. He got home, and his wife met him and asked what was the matter. He said he believed mortification had set in, and she took one whiff, as he took off his hat, and said she shouldn't think it had. "Where did you get into it?" said she. "Got into it," said the man. "I have not got into anything, but some dead dysentery has got hold of me, and I shall not live." She told him if any disease that smelled like that had got hold of him, and was going to be chronic, she felt as though he would be a burden to himself if he lived very long. She got his clothes off, soaked his feet in mustard water, and he slept. The hat was lying on the center table, and the children would come in and get a sniff of it, and lock at each other with respectful glances, and go out and play. The man slept in front of his house, and that he was lying in front of his house, and when the sun of pills arrived she told him all about the case. The doctor picked up the patient's new hat, tried it on, and got a sniff. He said the hat was picked before it was ripe. Then the doctor and the wife held a post mortem examination of the hat, and found the slice of limber cheese.

"How and short were the pray for they said." They woke the patient, and to prepare his mind for the revelation that was about to be made, the doctor asked him if his worldly affairs were in a satisfactory condition. He gasped and said they were. The doctor asked him if he had made his will. He said that he had not, but that he wanted a lawyer sent for at once. The doctor asked him if he felt as though he was prepared to shuffle off. The man said he had always tried to lead a different life, and had tried to be done by the same as he would do it himself, but that he might have made a mistake some way, and he would like to have a minister sent for to take an account of stock.

Then the doctor brought to the bedside the hat, opened up the sweat leather and showed the dying man what it was that had killed him, and told him that he was as well as any man in the city. The patient jumped out of bed and called for his revolver, and the doctor couldn't keep up with him on the way down town. The last we saw of the odoriferous citizen he was trying to bribe the bar tender to tell him which one of those politicians it was that put that slice of cheese in his hat; but he—Exchange
