Worlds Illuminated by Two Suns. Astronomy has shown that many of the stars which stud the heavens are real systems of worlds lit up with two suns...

Perhaps the same comets that disappear to our gaze, leaving the sphere of attraction of the sun, are attracted, and for a time become members of those wonderful systems.

What must be the nature of those worlds illuminated by two different suns, one yellow and another purple? Now rises the one and all is clothed in yellow; now the other and all is illuminated by complementary sources...

Then also the sun sets, and in the darkness of the night, though there is seldom night where there are two suns, the starry heavens are seen much the same there as here, except perhaps for moons reflecting light from the differently colored suns.
