CALLING THE DOCTOR.

The following item from the Louisville Medical News illustrates one of the ways in which medicine is practiced in that city:

The other morning, as a belated member of the Owl Club was steering home through the dense fog, which the writer is reliably informed hangs over the city at 3 a. m., he passed the house of a well-known physician. The vestibule of this residence was open, and on its side the dim rays of the moon, struggling through the gloom produced by the efforts of the city gas company, disclosed the mouth of an acoustic tube, underneath which was the inscription, "Whistle for Dr. Potts."

Not wishing to be disobliging about so small a matter, the Owl stumbled up the steps, and standing himself against the wall, blew into the pipe with all the strength of his lungs.

The physician, who was awakened by the resultant shrill whistle near his head, arose; and after wondering at the singular odor of whiskey in the room, groped his way to the tube and shouted, "Well."

"Glad to know you're well," was the reply; "but, being a doctor, I suppose you can keep well at cost price, can't you?"

"What do you want?" said the man of pills, not caring to joke in the airy nothing of his nightgown.

"Well," said the party at the other end of the tube, after a few moments' meditation. "Oh, by the way, are you young Potts or old Potts?"

"I am Dr. Potts. There is no young Potts."

"Not dead, I hope?"

"There never was any. I have no son."

"Then you are young Potts and old Potts too. Dear, dear, how singular."

"What do you want?" snapped the doctor, who was beginning to feel as though his legs were a pair of elongated icicles.

"You know old Mrs. Peavine, who lives in the next block?"

"Yes. Is she sick? What's the matter?"

"Do you know her nephew, too—Bill Briggs?"

"Yes. Well?"

"Well, he went up to Bridgeport, shooting this morning, and—"

"And he had an accident? Hold up a minute. I'll be right down."

"No, he's all right; but he got sixty-two ducks—eighteen of 'em mallards. I thought you might like to hear it."

And the joker hung on to the nozzle and laughed like a hyena digging up a fat missionary.

"I say," came down from the exasperated M. D., "that's a jolly good joke, my friend. Won't you take something?"

"What?" said the surprised humorist, pausing for breath.

"Why, take something. Take this."

And before the disgusted funny man could withdraw his mouth a hastily-compounded mixture of ink, ipecac and asafoetida squirted from the pipe and deluged him from head to foot, about a pint monopolizing his shirt-front and collar.

And while he danced frantically around, sponging himself off with his handkerchief, and swearing like a pirate in the last act, he could hear an angel voice from above sweetly murmur:

"Have some more? No? Well, good night. Come again soon, you funny dog, you. By-bye."

In a CONVICT'S DRESS PICKING OAKUM. Mr. Stead, the convict editor of the London Pall Mall Gazette, was interviewed in the Coldbath Fields Prison a day or two ago. His warder was present at the interview, and the visitor was not allowed to shake hands with the prisoner. Mr. Stead was in prison garb, consisting of a Gleangray cap, loose fitting yellow collarless jacket; stamped on the left breast with "Circle R 2, Stroke S," baggy, coarse yellow trousers, bearing the government broad arrow, and oversized patched boots. His hair was cropped short. Mr. Stead appeared to be suffering severely from cold, his hands being tucked in his capacious sleeves for warmth. He was in fairly good spirits, however. Mr. Stead is allowed a Bible in his cell, but the light is not sufficient to enable him to read it. His breakfast consists of thin porridge and brown bread, dinner of suet pudding and supper of porridge and brown bread. He sees nobody between six p. m. and six a. m. Mr. Stead's daily task is to pick one pound of oakum. The ordinary prisoners have to pick three pounds. The sentences of all prisoners date from the first day of the session of the court, which this year was October 19. Mr. Stead will, therefore, be released on January 19.
