Spirit Guidance.

One of the curious facts of New York business life is that many persons are governed in their commercial ventures by the advice of the "spirits." One of the most talented men of the Cotton Exchange used to say, "I'm going to buy cotton. The spirits tell me it is going up;" or "I'm going short; I had a communication from the spirits last night to the effect that the market is going down." He failed once or twice, but finally the spirits seemed to give the right "tip," and now he is rich. In the summer I see him at Saratoga; he stops at one of the best hotels, drives a fine equipage out to the lake every pleasant afternoon, and his winter life in New York is in the midst of luxurious and cultured surroundings. He has a fine head, a broad brow, is the author of a valuable book, the materials for which cost him $7,000 to collect, and he is well versed in literature and science. No one is more deeply read in the works of Herbert Spencer and others of the modern school of philosophers, no one is more acute as a reasoner on most subjects that engage the reflective mind. And yet he has been known to make remarks about the spirits and their knowledge of the future course of the cotton market that have made his friends stare with mingled amazement and regret. Such men of standing and undoubted intelligence on most subjects are invaluable to the spiritualistic sharers.

There was a crank broker on the old Naval Stores Exchange who, when the transactions in rosin and spirits of turpentine lagged on a dull day, would mesmerize the brokers. They would stretch out stiff as boards in mock obedience to his wonderful powers, and others would supplicate the mesmerizer in tones of mock agony not to harm the "subject." In gracious acquiescence to their pleadings he would give a lordly soap of his fingers, and the subject would come out of his so-called trance and weakly express a desire to have the mesmerizer "stand" a bottle of wine at Delmonico's as a slight return for having submitted himself to his dreaded powers.

Commodore Vanderbilt was the dupe of fortune tellers and spiritualists, though any one else would have found it difficult to swindle him. He was a coarse-minded man, with no education except that acquired in business life, which was very little.

A. T. Stewart was not the dupe of professional swindlers, but he indulged himself in a few harmless superstitions. For instance, when he had his principal store at Broadway and Chambers street, a woman kept an apple stand in front of his place, and he imagined she brought him good luck—that she was a "mascot," though that term had then never been heard in this country, and when he started his place at Broadway and Tenth street he insisted upon her moving up there in order that his good luck might continue. He lived on Fifth avenue two years after his marble palace close by was entirely completed, dreading to move into it because he had a superstitious horror of the new house. He lived in it only a comparatively short time when he died, and today no one knows whether his remains are in the crypt of his Garden City Cathedral, or buried by the grave robbers beneath a sign's refuse.—Savannah News

RELATION OF DIET IN DREAMS.

"Ah, if our dreams only came true," sighed the man that boards. "Last night I dreamed that I called on a lord. I find that I can control my visions to a considerable extent by dieting. For instance, if I wish to enjoy a calm night with dreams of a pleasant character, I eat toast or bread and milk just before retiring. If I wish to have a little excitement, quarreling, disputing or a little active exercise, I eat squash pie. I have found from experience and observation that squash pie acts strongly on the posterior part of the brain, where lie the bumps of competitiveness and acquisitiveness. I have known times when the consumption of two pieces of squash pie has led me to slay a man for his money within fifteen minutes after going to bed. To make my brain a chamber of horrors, however, I sit down an hour before bed-time and eat three sardines, six olives, a little Rochefort cheese with crackers, and when we understand psychology right we can lie down and map out our dreams as we now map out a day's work."—Buffalo Courier.
