CLEARING SALE

ALL SUMMER GOODS.

Having made up our minds to continue business in this city rather late in the present season, we laid in a larger stock of Summer Goods than the time for selling them would warrant, although we are gratified at the success we have met with, our sales having been larger than we could have possibly anticipated.

season's goods, and in order to make room for our fall stock, we will

His Last Request

"I heard a story on an Irishman the other day which I think is new," said a friend at the club. "This Irishman was in the habit of going home drunk every night of his life and beating his poor wife Biddy in the good old fashion. He didn't lick her because he disliked her or wanted to punish her, but just because he thought it the proper thing to do. Finally, however the patient woman could stand it no longer and appealed to the priest. The reverend father went to her home that evening and waited for Pat. He came, drunk as usual, and the good priest took him in hand.

"Pat," says he, 'you are drunk.'
'Yes, your reverence,' says Pat, 'I'm feelin' purty good.'
'Well, how long is this goin' to continue, I'd like to know?'
'Just as long as I kin git a drop of the creatur,' says Pat. 'I can't stop drinkin'."

"Now, see here, Pat," says the good father, 'I'll tell you what. You'll stop this right here to-night. If you ever get drunk again I'll turn ye into a rat—d'ye mind that?' If I do get drunk, into a rat ye go. Now remember that—there's a good man!"
"The priest went away and Pat was docile that night; but the next night when he came home and kicked open the door one glance showed Biddy that he was loaded to the hat. She gauged his jig' at once and saw that he was in fighting trim, so she dodged behind the table in an attitude of defense.

"Don't be afraid, darlin'," said Pat, in a subdued key, as he steadied himself before dropping into a chair, "I'm not goin' to bate you this night. I'm not goin' to lay the weight of me finger on ye. I want ye to be kind to me to-night, darlin', and to remember, if ye kin, the days when we was swate-hearts, and when I was always kind to ye and ye loved me. Ye know his riverence was here last night, and he told me if I got drunk again he'd turn me into a rat. I'm drunk this mornin', darlin'. The praste didn't see me, but he knows I'm drunk, and this night into a rat I go. I want ye to be kind to me, darlin', and watch me, and when ye see me gittin' little, and the hair growin' out on me, an' me whiskers gittin' long, for God's sake, darlin', as ye love me, kape yer eye on the cat!"

SENDING A MAP BY TELEGRAPH.—The fac-simile telegraph, by which manuscript, maps or pictures may be transmitted, is a species of the automatic methods already described, in which the receiver is actuated synchronously with its transmitter. By Lenoir's method a picture or map is upon the cylindrical surface of a rotating drum, which revolves under a point having a slow movement along the axis of the cylinder, and thus the conducting point goes over the surface in a spiral path. The electric circuit will be broken by every ink mark on the cylinder which is in this path, and thereby corresponding marks are made in a spiral line by an ink marker upon a drum at the receiving end. To produce these outlines it is only necessary that the two drums be rotated in unison. The system is of little utility, there being no apparent demand for fac-simile transmission, particularly at so great an expense of speed, for it will be seen that instead of making a character of the alphabet by a few separate pulses, as is done by Morse, the number must be greatly increased. Many dots become necessary to show the outline of the more complex characters. The pantograph is an interesting type of the fac-simile method. In this form the movements of a pen in the writer's hand produce corresponding movements of the pen at the distant station, and thereby a fac-simile record.—Scribner's.

A Philadelphia newsboy went into a Sanson street dining-room, sat down at a table and wanted to know with a business air what they had. The waiter-girl began to chant a list—fish cakes, corn beef, vegetable soup, clam chowder—"Chowder!" claimed the youth, with an ecstatic thump against his flannel bosom. "That's the song wot reached my heart."
