A Peep at Pompeii.
Pompeii possesses a secret power that captivates, I may almost say, melts like it is a constant delight to think and talk of its charms. It costs two francs to get a guide to pilot us in its ancient streets. Imagine a whole city, with a capacity for about forty thousand inhabitants, standing in naked walls a story high, and you get a fine picture of our first view of Pompeii. The guide first leads to the right immediately after entering the gate, to what is called the museum. Here are the fossil remains of human beings buried by the ashes of the terrible eruption of Vesuvius in A. D. 79. We see the agonies of death on the features of the face, and the contortions of the muscles as they writhed in pain. When they were discovered, some bodies were in a position that told long stories; one man grasped a purse as he lay in the centre of the street; a steward was found by his master's door, with the key still in his hand; a faithful Roman sentinel was by his post of duty, his weapon near by, which post he had not left, though the city was near forsaken at the dire disaster. More than sixty bodies have been exhumed, but they are not all here in the museum; only a few bodies remain here, and with them they have left the body of a dog, poor animal; it also shows the points of death in a striking way.

We are next led along a principal street toward the central market place. As we walk along we may observe the ruins of chariots, formed two thousand years ago; and, on either side of the street in convenient quarters, are fountains with spout or part where the water flowed out, worn smooth by the application of thousands of Roman lips. Lead water pipes lead to these fountains, and they resemble much the pipes in use in our times. We observe the streets are so narrow that two vehicles of the width indicated by the ruins in the paving (they are four feet apart), could not pass each other, showing us they must have had certain times for coming in and going out. The pavement is of a hard volcanic stone; and the stones are neatly fitted together, though not cut in regular forms or shapes. Many open-faced shops are along the principal streets, and wine shops are very frequent. The wine seller kept his wines in large earthen vessels, sunk in the stone counter, so that when the covers were placed on, they lay flat with the top of the bar. Most of these counters, or bars, are of fine marble, and marble is common to the city. Signs are painted over many shops, and we can see that the colors were once glowing, though now much faded. We may also learn by walking through the principal streets, that advertising is not altogether an invention of the present age. Placards, and posters enliven the streets, and many portions of walls were well worked over with the painter's brush. In the public quarters were panels evidently set apart for public use, and they served much as our newspapers do now. When first found they gave announcements of an election on hand when the city was destroyed; and several parties had their several candidates' names placed up to good advantage with the names of those who recommended or nominated them. Some ordinances of the city are cut in stone and posted conspicuously; and the Emperor Titus had some orders posted likewise.

At the public market place our guide showed us many public buildings, among them a neat theatre which would seat over 4,000. It was built, or rather cut in the side of the hill, like most of the ancient theatres, and tier after tier of stone seats ran up the sloping sides of the hill. The stage is narrow, but probably well adapted to the mere reciting of a play, as seems to have been their mode. Some little machinery was used in connection with the stage. The pleasures of a kind which we would rather not notice were common. Not a few streets were the abodes of the women who lent themselves to belsh purposes. The frescoing of the rooms they occupied and the stone furniture of their vile uses are shocking to all sightseers who gain admittance. Many of the statues and pictures found are so obscene that they are hid from public gaze. The city was a resort of rich men of Rome, and nature is so lavish of her beauties that it must have been a favorite resort. Cicero is known to have had a villa here, but we do not like to connect the learned Roman's name with the licentiousness of the city. The villas of these noted rich men of Rome are elegant to behold; the rooms are generally small, but every wall is frescoed, and the mosaics on the floors are an interesting study. On the threshold of many of these buildings, engraved in large characters in mosaic, is the word salve (welcome), indicating, it may be supposed, the readiness of the host to welcome his guests.

The Pompeians were great lovers of art, and statues adorn the interior of dwellings, and abound in the public places; even the ordinary utensils of the kitchen were fashioned in a remarkable manner, and were far more artistic than those of the present day; they are specimens of art that evoke the admiration of every beholder.

Many bakeries abound, and some of the ovens were full of bread when found. The loaves may be seen at the museum in Naples. They are round, and weigh about two pounds; some are stamped to indicate they are of wheat flour. Different grains were also found, and may be seen at the same place. In connection with a bakery are some unguinary stone mills. They are formed of two large blocks of stone of cone shape, the smaller ends being placed together, so they resemble somewhat huge hourglasses. The upper stone alone turned and the grain was crushed between them. Sometimes the servants of the place turned the mill; at other times slaves, for some misdemeanor, had their eyes put out, and then they were set to work at grinding, by pushing on a long sweeper pole.—Cor. Salt Lake Herald.

MEDICINAL

Take Simmons Liver Regulator One Dose WORTH 100 Dollars

DEAR S. L. R.—FRIENDS: I consider one dose of Simmons' Liver Regulator worth $100. I was constipated, had headache, could eat nothing with satisfaction or appetite; had the blues and felt altogether out of sorts. I resorted to blue mass, calomel, quinine and all remedies suggested, but only obtained temporary relief. One dose of S. L. R. did me more good than the $100 worth of doctors and doctoring. Respectfully,
T. C. MARBLEY.

I have been a teacher for twenty years, and during that time have had repeated attacks of headache, produced by torpid liver, and I have been entirely cured by the use of Simmons' Liver Regulator. I found it to be of so mild a character in its action as not to interfere, in the least, with my duties in the school room. To those similarly situated and subject to same, I cannot too highly recommend Simmons' Liver Regulator.
