Guerilla Mosby's Big Raid.
Colonel John S. Mosby, late of the Confederate army, known as a partisan ranger, but called a guerilla all the same, talked thus:

"In April, 1863, General J. E. B. Stuart, the dashing Prince Rupert of the Confederacy, recommended that I be promoted to the rank of major, which promptly received the indorsement of the Secretary of War, J. A. Seddon. In order to signalize my advancement I proposed to go on rather a big raid and bag a small army of Union cavalry."
"About three hundred cavalry were at Dranesville and I had harnessed them so much that they did not put their picket line a half mile from camp. I wrote to General Stuart and advised him to send a small force and capture them, but he was busy watching for Hooker to cross the Rappahannock and could not spare any troops. I resolved to scoop in the three hundred by surprising them."

"On the 31st of March I was met at Rector's Cross Roads, in Loudoun county, by 69 men, the largest force I had ever had under me up to that time. They were a motley crowd, though somewhat better dressed than Falstaff's famous regiment. Some of them had been wounded and were unable to do infantry duty, and others had absented themselves from their regiment without leave. But I never investigated a man's military record when he fought under me any more than I would his pedigree."
"The men got prizes in the way of booty captured, and somehow they seemed to like to go on expeditions that were hazardous and often richly rewarded them."

"Getting near Dranesville I learned that the enemy had broken camp and gone beyond D. H. Hunt's Run, several miles below. Passing through Dranesville we traveled to Mitchell's farm, which was in the forks of Goose Creek and the Potomac river. Snow was on the ground, although it was the last day of March, and we were glad to rest and warm ourselves."

"The enemy were camped about fifteen miles below and I did not think it possible that they could hear of my presence before morning. We fed and picketed our horses inside the barnyard, which was surrounded by a strong fence. Sentinels were stationed as guard over the horses and to arouse us in the event of alarm. Many of the men went to bed in the hayloft, while others, including myself, lay down on the floor in the front room of the dwelling house before a big log fire."

"There were Union camps across the river, but I had no fear of them that night. When I woke up next morning one of my men came in and said the enemy were making signals across the river. I went to the back yard to reconnoiter, when I saw one of my men, Dick Moran, running across the field waving his hat and calling out that the 'Yankees are coming.' Not a third of our horses were then bridled or saddled. I had buckled on my arms coming out of the house. As soon as I got to the enclosure where our horses were I saw the enemy coming through a gate about two hundred yards off. It was too late to retreat, and so I ordered my men to get ready to fight."

"They saddled and mounted and reserved their fire. I did not have time to saddle my horse and had to lead the charge on foot. Captain Flint was so sure of bagging us that he ordered the gate shut after passing through, in order to prevent us from escaping. Another squadron was in the open field, moving in our rear. It looked blue for me, and the many shining sabres flashing in the hands of the cavalrymen as they dashed toward us made me think that at last my Waterloo had arrived. We were cooped up in the angle of two streams and surrounded by over four times our number, with half of my men unprepared for a fight. Captain Flint, by dividing his command, increased my chances of escape at least fifty per cent."

"In previous engagements I had learned the superiority of the pistol over the sabre and ordered my men to use these weapons. When Captain Flint arrived within fifty yards of the barnyard gate I advanced, pistol in hand, opened the gate and ordered my men that had mounted to charge. With wild yells they dashed into the ranks of the Union cavalrymen, and I tell you it was a conflict that meant life or death to us all. When I got through the gate Harry Hatcher, a brave and valiant soldier, dismounted and gave me his horse, which I mounted quickly and rode into the fray."

"Our tactics completely surprised Captain Flint, who evidently thought we would remain on the defensive. In a few seconds the captain was shot dead, and before his men hardly knew it we were among them with the death dealing revolver. Their swords were no more effective than wooden weapons and in a few minutes they began to retreat pell-mell. When they reached the closed gate they could not open it, and many perished before it was pushed down. All my men performed wonders, but I wish to speak of a young artillery officer, Samuel F. Chapman, who quit the study of divinity, and like the Roundhead of old, went into battle singing psalms. He was with me to go on that special raid and when I saw the Union soldiers closing in upon us that bright April morning I thought that young Sam would never see again, except in a heavenly choir. Armed with two revolvers and a sabre he dashed into the ranks of the enemy like a wrathful Achilles, a pistol in each hand, and every time he fired, either to the right or left, a saddle was emptied. Before the enemy had got back to the gate, retreating, Sam had emptied both of his revolvers and was using his sabre. He got right in front of me, indeed in front of us all, and rising in his stirrups swung his sabre from left to right, slaughtering in a wholesale manner. The reverend Sam was not satisfied with the effective work he did at the gate, but he continued the chase some three miles. He got separated in the woods from the rest of us and dashed alone into a squad of Vermont men, where he received a cut from a sabre. How he escaped being killed was a miracle. The Vermonters were busy escaping, I presume, and did not take time to kill Sam carefully and effectually."

"One of my men, Hunter, saw him doing battle alone, like a hunted tiger in his lair, and went to his rescue. Now Hunter was a brave soldier, and he dashed up to rescue Sam with the same confidence that a hundred men would attack one. It had the desired effect any way, for he caused the squad to retreat, leaving Sam bleeding but alive. It was a scattered, wild chase for three or four miles, and dead men lined the roadside. I made Sam a captain for his part in the battle."
"We issued forth a forlorn hope that morning, only wishing to cut our way through Capt. Flint's ranks and escape, but the deadly revolver pitted against the sabre made victory smile upon us."—N. Y. Herald.

MEDICINAL.
WINSLOW'S
REGULATOR
Its peculiar efficacy is due as much to the process and mode of preparation as to the ingredients themselves. Take it in time. It checks diseases in the outset, or if they be advanced will prove a potent cure.
No Home should be Without It.
It takes the place of a doctor and costly prescriptions. All who lead sedentary lives will find it the best preventive of and cure for Indigestion, Constipation, Headache, Biliousness, Pleas and Mental Depression. No loss of time, no interference with business while taking. For children it is most innocent and harmless. No danger from exposure after taking. Cures Colic, Diarrhoea, Bowel Complaints, Feverishness and Nervousness. In all cases delicate persons will find it the mildest and most effective remedy. A little taken at night insures refreshing sleep and a natural evacuation of the bowels. A little taken in the morning sharpens the appetite, cleanses the stomach and weakens the system.
A PHYSICIAN'S OPINION.
"I have been practicing medicine for twenty years and have never been able to put up a vegetable compound that would, like Winslow's Regulator, promptly and effectively move the Liver to action, and at the same time aid instead of weaken the digestive and assimilative powers of the system."
