FOR BLOOD AND SKIN!

A. B. C. Chemical Co.,
Richmond, Va.

Having for a long time suffered from the effects of a horrible blood trouble, and after resorting to medicine, which did not afford relief, I have been entirely restored, and it affords me pleasure to attest the efficacy of this medicine. It is certainly a very great tonic, and I recommend any suffering from blood troubles to try it.

A Fight in Mid-Air

Two men fighting in mid-air. This was the terrible scene enacted a few days since on a massive iron tower being erected by the water works company, at Point, Ill. When completed, this tower will be 120 feet high. The steel plates are five feet wide and ten feet long, and the line of rivets on the main joints, which run horizontally, and the upright seams, which connect the plates end to end, call for a rivet at every two inches. It, therefore, takes 775 rivets to set a single row of plates. The tower had reached the height of ninety feet, and two gangs of riveters were at work with their heaters and holders-on. The latter work on the inside of the tower, while the men who hammer the rivets to a head work on a frail scaffold on the outside. To the beholder who stands on the solid earth this outside scaffold seems to be as thin, as frail, and as delicate as an spider's web. There it winds around the tall, black iron tower, frail below and dwindling away in the upward distance into nothingness. Ninety feet from the ground, and on this frail scaffold, the other morning two riveters were working, and from some unaccountable cause became involved in an altercation.

Bessemer steel is hard, but it is not harder than the hearts of infuriated men. Iron rivets, awaiting the touch of the hammer, are hot, but they are not hotter than the inflamed passions of the sons of Adam. The riveters in question came with the water-works company from Syracuse, N. Y. One was Mique, the other Dennis. Each man swung a seven-pound hammer. Mique made a mistake and struck Dennis on the hand. Maddened with the sudden pain, Dennis became at once a demon and swung his hammer full and fair at the head of Mique. Had the iron head of the hammer crushed in those locks a mangled and lifeless and half-headless corpse would have toppled down to the solid earth, 90 feet below. Mique, however, threw up his hammer in a defensive way, and parried the blow. Again the hammer of Dennis swung, and again it was parried, but as its head caromed on the steel head of Mique's defensive hammer, it shot off on a tangent, like a glancing arrow that strikes a tree, and knocked away one of the supports of the scaffold. There was a sickening, cracking sound as the frail upright was knocked away from the braces and down went the ends of two planks compelling one section of the scaffold. Mique, who had been retreating from before the fierce advances of Dennis, was on a firm footing, but Dennis was compelled to make a giant spring to save himself. In the terror of the moment he leaped almost to the very shoulder of the affrighted Mique and knocked him down backward, falling on top of him. The force of the concussion was such that both men rolled to the edge of the scaffold, and over went Dennis.

Instinctively, and in the desperation of the moment, he caught one heel in the upright immediately behind him and threw his left arm around the neck of Mique. There he hung on the edge of the scaffold, suspended by only one heel and wrist, while below him—nearly a hundred feet below—was a row of iron pipes and plates of steel. To fall was to be dashed to pieces.

To fall on the pipes was to break arms and legs and back. To fall on the curved and upturned edges of the plates was to be cut into huge and ghastly slices.

The man's hand trembled, and his hammer dropped from his nerveless grasp. It went swiftly downward, hit a projection on the scaffold, bounded off, and striking a fifteen-inch pipe, broke it in two as cleverly and as keenly as if it had been split with a knife. The hand swung over and grasped Mique around the loins with an awful tenacity, and there the man struggled on the awful verge of the scaffold, and at that dizzy height, Dennis had almost managed to swing his weight on the scaffold when Mique's hickory shirt ripped, and back the man went into space, this time losing the purchase of his heel, and swinging clear over so that he held himself only by one arm, and hung suspended upright in the air. Mique managed to trust the toes of his left foot between the two narrow planks that constituted the scaffold, and thus acquired a leverage. Tossing over the other shoulder, by a strong and almost miraculous movement, he swung the suspended body of Dennis back to the platform and dashed his face against the tower. There he lay motionless and still, and when their companions reached them they found that both had fainted dead away. The awful duel had lasted less than forty seconds, but there is no record that can compete with it.

Ten minutes later Dennis and Mique were hammering at the rivets as merrily as of yore.

A Doctor

Bill saved by always keeping Simmons Liver Regulator in the house. If you have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night; if you lead a sedentary life or are weakened by the strain of your duties; if you need a cathartic to relax the bowels; if you require action on the Liver to relieve indigestion; if you require something to purify the blood and regulate the system; if you are traveling in unhealthy localities, or food or water does not agree with you, a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator will remove all trouble.

Ex-Governor of Ga., and U.S. Senator Joseph E. Brown says: "You are at liberty to use my name in praise of Simmons Liver Regulator, and recommend it to everyone as the best preventive of Fever and Ague. It supercedes Quinine if taken in time."
