THE JUDGE OF HANOVER COUNTY SPEAKS.

Tim. Howard suffered for three years with lung and throat troubles, and last spring was thought by his neighbors to be dying. I heard of his condition and gave him A. B. C. Tonic. Its effect was magical. In a very short time he was able to leave his bed, and now regards himself a well man. Others in this vicinity have taken the "Tonic" with pronounced benefit.

Very respectfully,
S. C. REDD,

The Remains of De Soto

Yesterday, while laborers were excavating for the foundation of a large brick block that is now being erected in Fort Jefferson, one of them unearthed a few human bones. As this part of the Mississippi Valley abounds in Indian mounds, the workman supposed he was digging into one of them, but soon he uncovered what proved to be a long, straight and very heavy sword. News spread over the town that the grave of one of the soldiers of Gen. Clark or of Gen. Grant had been discovered, together with his sword, which had been buried with him.

In 1781 General Clark built a fort where this place now stands. It was there that he fought a decisive battle with the Indians, losing many of his own men and covering the ground with the dead bodies of the aborigines. During the late war Gen. Grant had his headquarters at this place for many months. Several small battles were fought here, and it can be truly called the bloody ground of guerrilla warfare, for nowhere in the South was a locality so molested and devastated by guerrillas and desperadoes as southwestern Kentucky and southeastern Missouri.

Knowing these facts it was very natural for the people to believe that they had found the grave of one of Clark's or Grant's soldiers, or that of some wandering guerrilla. As the workman proceeded with his labor he threw up a steel breastplate and helmet. These were almost eaten up with rust, and though the holes of the helmet could be seen, the gray bones of a fast-decaying skull. In order to gain some information concerning the strange discovery, the handle and scabbard of the sword were cleaned. The sword itself was rusted to the scabbard, and could not be drawn.

The shield on the handle and the scabbard were made of a strange composition that rust had but little effect upon, and they seemed but slightly injured by time. The handle of the sword is of pure gold, at the top of which is a large diamond clustered around with rubies. On the handle was the name, "Hernando De Soto." Below is a coat-of-arms, which consists of a spring coiled out of a hillside, and close by the spring a child. Underneath this is the inscription, written in Latin, "The Spring of Youth." The engraving is remarkably well done.

These few bones and implements of war are no doubt all that remain of the great De Soto, who, believing that somewhere in the New World was a spring which bestowed on any one who bathed in its crystal waters perpetual youth, gave up wealth and luxury to undergo the hardships of a wild and unknown country, and at last die in discouragement and defeat. History says that De Soto died somewhere in this part of the country, and his body was thrown into the river to keep the fact of his death from the Indians. But history is probably mistaken. Fort Jefferson has the honor of his grave.—Fort Jefferson Letter to St. Louis Globe Democrat.

SUGGESTIONS ON READING—It is absolute folly to read anything because it is new, or because it is puff'd in the newspapers, or because the superficial people who constitute what is called "society" talk about it. Only the best works in every department of literature should be read by people who are relieved of the necessity of reading for criticism. And, in these days, it is our good fortune to have the best literature of the world published at prices which place it within reach of the poorest person with intelligence enough to enjoy and profit by it. The masterpieces of human intellect and genius, of all lands and ages and tongues, have been translated into worthy English speech, so that, while the immortal authors wrote in their own dialect, we read them in our mother tongue. To read the best novels is a sure preventive against the trashy fiction which is poured in such enormous volume from the press; they would form a taste which could find no satisfaction in tales of the cheap sensational sort. The best poetry is full of wisdom and beauty, and, keyed up to the lofty strain, the mind would care for no other. So in every department of literature. Select the best first, and the mind will draw its own lines afterward. And even in the newspaper, it is quite as important to skip as to read, selecting only what is of real interest and value. Reading and absorbing what we read, is a thoroughly vital conversation, thinking over again and again the beautiful or weighty thoughts they contain, is to make reading a source of increasing enjoyment and knowledge and power.—N. Y. Evangelist.
