

MEDICINAL

The dead-letter office sustained by our government is not the only one. Death runs a dead-letter office, to which are consigned thousands of intended letters that the would-be writers never wrote because of premature death, as a result of their own reckless disregard of health. There are letters of love and hate, affection and fury, pleading and forgiveness and borrowing and lending. Letters to sweethearts and rivals, husbands and wives, and sons and daughters. They never reach their destination, nor they ever written. Death stamps them "only intended"—and the world is full of them. The man who wants to live to realize his hopes and ambitions, to do deeds good or bad, to carry out cherished intentions, must pay some attention to health. The best rule of health is—"when out-of-order take the right remedy." Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best medicine for working men and women. It gives you the body and brain for the tug of daily toil. It gives edge to the appetite and makes digestion perfect. It fills the blood with the life-giving elements that build firm flesh, healthy tissue, responsive muscle and vibrant nerve tissue. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption. An honest druggist won't urge a substitute.

"I can praise Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery," writes Mrs. Florence Hunter, of Corley, Logan Co., Ark. "I cured me when all other medicines failed. I had La Grippe and it settled on my lungs; I was down three months when I commenced taking the Golden Medical Discovery, and my bottle made me sound and well."

Send for Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advertiser. Enclose 21 one-cent stamps to cover mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for a paper-covered copy. Cloth binding to cents extra. It is a thousand-page book with over three hundred illustrations; formerly sold for $1.50. For limited time can be had for cost of mailing.

DR. MCGUIRE AND STONEWALL JACKSON.

Dr. Hunter McGuire, medical director of General Stonewall Jackson's Corps, delivered an interesting address Saturday night at the Confederate Camp dinner, in New York.

Dr. McGuire told many incidents of General Jackson on the battlefield, the most interesting and dramatic of which are the following:

"At Malvern Hill, when a portion of our army was beaten and to some extent demoralized, Hill and Ewell and Early came to tell him that they could make no resistance if McClellan attacked them in the morning. It was difficult to wake General Jackson, as he was exhausted and very sound asleep. I tried it myself, and after many efforts finally succeeded. When he was made to understand what was wanted, he said: 'McClellan and his army will be gone by daylight, and went to sleep again.' The generals thought him mad at the prediction was true.

"At Fredericksburg, after Burnside's repulse, he asked me how many batteries I had. I told him, and asked why he wanted to know. He said that he wanted to have a piece of white cloth to tie on each man's arm, so that his soldiers might recognize each other in a night attack; and he asked to be allowed to make such an attack and drive his foes into the swollen river or capture him. Subsequent events demonstrated that he meant the state of things within the rifle lines, and would have accomplished his purpose. General Lee withheld his consent, for the reason that so soon restrained him in like cases—he could not put at so great risk an army which the South could not replace.

"I cannot give you any instances or illustrations of the mental action by which he reached his conclusions or revised the combinations which defeated his enemy; for Jackson took no counsel save with his 'familiar,' the genius of War, and his God. He did hold one, and only one, council of war. To March, 1862, at Winchester, Jackson and his small army less than 5,000 men. General Banks, who was advancing upon Winchester from Harper's Ferry and Charlestown, had 30,000 soldiers. General Jackson repeatedly offered General Banks battle, but the latter declined, and on the right of the 11th of March went into camp four miles from Winchester. General Jackson sent for his officers and proposed to make a night attack, but the plan was not approved by the council. He sent for the officers a second time some hours later, and again urged them to agree to make the night assault, but they again disapproved of the attempt. So, late in the afternoon, we withdrew from Winchester and marched to Newton. I rode with the General as we left the place, and as we reached a high point overlooking the town we both turned to look at Winchester, just evacuated and now left to the mercy of the Federal soldiers. I think that a man may sometimes yield to overwhelming emotion, and that I was utterly overcome by the fact that I was leaving all that I had dear on earth. But my emotion was arrested by one look at Jackson. His face was fairly blazing with the fire that was burning in him, and I felt awed before him. Presently he cried out with a manner that was almost savage, 'That is the last council of war I will ever hold.' And it was—his first and last. Thereafter he held council in the secret chamber of his own heart, and acted, instantaneous decision, absolute self-reliance, every action, every word displayed. His voice displayed it in battle. It was not the peal of the trumpet, but the sharp crack of the rifle—sudden, imperative, resolute.

"Jackson always expected to hold his lines, but was almost dangerously agitated. I heard him once say: 'We sometimes fail to drive the enemy from his position. He always fails to drive us.' But he was never content with a defensive, however successful or however exhausting. In the terribly destructive battle of Sharpsburg he was looking all of that day for the chance to make the counter stroke.

"He was always calm and self-controlled. He never lost his balance for one moment. At the first Manassas, when he reached the field and found our men under Bee and Bartow falling back—when the confusion was greatest and Bee, in despair, cried out 'They are driving us back!' there was not the slightest emotion apparent about him. His thin lips were compressed and his eyes were ablaze when he curtly said: 'Then, sir, we will give them the bayonet!'

"In the very severe engagement at Chantilly, fought during a heavy thunder storm, when the voice of the artillery of heaven could scarcely be distinguished from that of the enemy, an aide came up with a message from A. P. Hill that he asked leave to retire. 'Give my compliments to General Hill,' and tell him that the Yankee ammunition is as wet as his; to stay where he is. There was always danger and blood when he began his terse sentences with 'Give my compliments.'

"Jackson knew the value of the southern volunteer better and sooner (as I believe) than any other of our great leaders. On this subject I once heard him say: 'The patriot volunteer fighting for country and his right, makes the most reliable soldier on earth.'

"The first time I was under fire, the attempt to diagnose my feelings did not discover to me anything that I recognized as positive enjoyment. I told General Jackson frankly what my feelings were, and asked him how he felt the first time he experienced it. 'Afraid the fire would not be hot enough for me to distinguish myself,' he promptly replied.

"I have seen General Jackson stop while the army was on the march to help a poor simple woman find her son, when she only knew that this son was in Jackson's command. There is no measuring the intensity with which the very soul of Jackson burned in battle. Out of it he was very gentle. After the battle of the second Manassas we were sitting by the fire drinking the coffee out of our tin cups when I said: 'We have won this battle by the hardest kind of fighting.' And he answered me very gently and softly: 'No, no; we have won it by the blessing of Almighty God!'

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident of which Mr. John Oliver, of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use, for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cents per bottle at E. L. Allen's Drug Store.

To give you an opportunity of testing the great merit of Ely's Cream Balm, the most reliable cure for catarrh and cold in the head, a generous 10 cent trial size can be had of your druggist, or we mail it for ten cents. Full size 50 cents.

56 Warren Street, New York City.

It is the medicine available all others for catarrh, and is worth its weight in gold. I can use Ely's Cream Balm with safety, and it does all that is claimed for it.—[B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.]

Mrs. M. B. Ford, Ruddle's, Ill., suffered for eight years from dyspepsia and chronic constipation and was finally cured by using Dr. Witt's Little Early Bitters the famous little pills for all stomach and liver troubles. Charles G. Lennon.
