Griswold vs. Smith. New York, July 22.—With Miss Helen Woodruff Smith, of Stamford, Conn., in seclusion on her yacht Viking and Young Russell Griswold, who is suing her for $50,000 for breach of promise, in the hands of his lawyers, it is declared that there will be no compromise. Griswold says he will press the suit to a finish, while Miss Smith declares that her defense will be "black-mail."

Before taking to the yacht the pre-possessing defendant expressed herself vigorously regarding her one-time admirer. "Turncoat," "creature," "nasty little ingrate," "kid," "beggard," "ill-advised, presumptuous little fool," "beggar," "houlder," "black-cad," "scoundrel," were a few of the epithets she applied to her former admirer whom she said she would make mirror for the publication of their correspondence. In his hotel here Young Griswold, when told about a few of the terms his former love had applied to him, grinned and said: "It was to be expected she wouldn't like the whole thing to come out, and of course she's afraid." Another bunch of Miss Smith's letters was made public by the young man today. A few extracts follow: "Be sure to destroy the evidence of my whereabouts and do not say I am here, or anywhere, unless in a vagrant way—'Out West.' Best is to say as Evelyn Thaw did—'I don't know.'"

The Unknown Fighter. New York, July 22.—There is an insistent rumor here that the "unknown" fighter in whose behalf Hugh McIntosh, the Australian promoter, and Jim Corbett recently challenged Jack Johnson, son of the millionaire thread man and national amateur boxing champion, Corbett recently put on the gloves with young Barbour and at the end of their bout expressed intense surprise at the skill, strength and endurance displayed by the amateur. Although wealthy, Barbour is said to be eager to win laurels in the prize ring. Neither Corbett nor McIntosh will yet reveal the identity of their "unknown."
