OUR AGAN.

A THRILLING STORY.

One day, in the gold mountains of Chontales, I first saw a hurricane. The scenery of that table land is bleak and sad and lonely, as in all auriferous regions.

On this day (we had not enjoyed our rife on the sun for more than a week) the heat was intense; a close and stifling atmosphere shrouded all the land, and from each marshy spot—crowned though it were with palmy bamboos and sprinkled over with white lilies—drew a foul and poisonous miasma. This dull air quivered with heat; mountain and volcano, and savannah lay still and gray as a landscape of the dead
