THE LIONS OF THE LORD

A TALE OF THE OLD WEST
BY HARRY LEON WILSON, AUTHOR OF
"THE SPENDERS"

"I'd like to know why not?" retorted this good man, aggressively.
"Because times has changed; this ain't '87."
"I'll almost do itself," insisted Snow. "What say, Glimes?" and he turned to one of the others.
"Looks all right," answered the man addressed. "By heck! but that's a purty saddle he carries!"
"What say, Taggart?"
"For God's sake, no, Bishop! No—I got enough dead faces looking at me now from this place. I'm hanted into hell a'ready, like he said he was yesterday. By God! I sometimes think I'll have my ears busted and my eyes put out to get away from the bloody things!"
"Ho! Scared, are you? Well, I'll do it myself. You don't need to help."
"Better let well enough alone, Brother Warren!" interposed Wright.
"But it ain't well enough! Think of that girl going to a low cuss of a Gentlemen when Brigham wants her. Why, think of letting such a critter get away, even if Brigham didn't want her!"

"You know they got Brother Brigham under indictment for murder now, account of that Aiken party."
"What of it? He'll get off."
"That he will, but it's because he's Brigham. You ain't. You're just a south country bishop. Don't you know he'd throw you to the Gentile courts as a sop quicker'n a wink if he got a chance—just like he'll do with old John D. Lee the minute George A. petters out so that the chain will be broke between Lee and Brigham?"
"And maybe this cuss has got friends," suggested Glimes.
"Who'd know but the girl?" Snow insisted. "And Brother Brigham would fix her all right. Is the household of faith to be spoiled?"
"Well, they got a railroad running through it now," said Wright, "and a telegraph, and a lot of soldiers. So don't you count on me, Brother Snow, at any stage of it now or afterwards.
I got a pretty sizable family that would hate to lose me. Look out.
Here he comes."

Follett now came up, speaking in a cheerful manner that nevertheless chilled even the enthusiasm of the good Bishop Snow.
"Now, gentlemen, just by way of friendly advice to you—like as not I'll be stepping in front of some of you in the next hour. But it isn't going to worry me any, and I'll tell you why. I'd feel awful sad for you all if anything was to happen to me—if the Injuns got me, or I was took bad with a chill, or a jack-rabbit crept up and bit me to death, or anything. You see, there's a train of 25 big J. Murphy wagons will be along here over the San Bernardino trail. They are coming out of their way, almost any time now, on purpose to pick me up.
Fact is, my ears have been pricking all morning to hear the old bull-whips crack. There were 31 men in the train when they went down, and there may be more coming back. It's a train of Ezra Calkins, my adopted father. You see, they know I've been here on special business, and I sent word the other day I was about due to finish it, and they wasn't to go through coming back without me. Well that bullfit will stop for me—and they'll get me or get pay for me. That's their orders. And it isn't a train of women and babies, either. They're such an outrageous rough lot, quick-tempered and all that, that they wouldn't believe the truth that I had an accident—not if you swore it on a stack of Mormon bibles topped off by the life of Joe Smith. They'd go right out and make Amalon look like a whole cavayard of razor-toothed buffaloes had raced back and forth over it. And the rest of the 2,000 men on Ezra Calkins' pay roll would come hanging around pestering you all with Winchesters. They'd make you scratch gravel, sure!"

"Now, let's get to work. I see you'll be awful careful and tender with me.
I'll bet I don't get even a sprained ankle. You folks get him, and I'll show you where he said the place was."
Two hours later Follett came running back to where Prudence lay on the saddle blanket in the warm morning sun.
"The wagon train is coming—hear the whips? Now, look here, why don't we go right on with it, in one of the big wagons? They're coming back light, and we can have a J. Murphy that is bigger than a whole lot of houses in this country. You don't want to go back there, do you?" She shook her head.
"No; it would hurt me to see it now. I should be expecting to see him at every turn. Oh, I couldn't stand that—poor sorry little father!"
"Well, then, leave it all; leave the place to the women, and good rid-ance, and come off with me. I'll send one of the boys back with a pack mule for any plunder you want to bring away, and you needn't ever see the place again."
She nestled in his arms, feeling in her grief the comfort of his tenderness.

"Yes, take me away now."
The big wagon could be heard plainly, cracking like rifle shots, and shortly came the rattling and hollow rumbling of the wagons and the cries of the teamsters to their six-mule teams. There were shouts and calls, snatches of song from along the line, then the rattling of harness, and in a cloud of dust the train was beside them, the teamsters sitting with rounded shoulders up under the bowed covers of the big wagons.
A hall came from the rear of the train, and a bronzed and bearded man in a leather jacket cantered up on a small pony.
"Hello, there, Rool! I'm whoopin' glad to see you."
He turned to the driver of the foremost wagon.
"All right, boys! We'll make a lay-by for noon."
Follett shook hands with him heartily, and turned to Prudence.
"This is my wife, Lew. Prudence, this is Lew Steffins, our wagon master."
"Shoo, now!—you young cub—married? Well, I'm right glad to see Mrs.
Rool Follett—and bless your heart, little girl!"
"Did you stop back there at the settlement?"
"Yes; and they said you'd hit the pike about dark last night, to chase a crazy man. I told them I'd be back with the whackers if I didn't find you.
I was afraid some trouble was on, and here you're only married to the sweetest thing that ever—why, she's been crying! Anything wrong?"
"No; never mind now, anyway.
We're going on with you, Lew."
"Bully proud to have you. There's that third wagon—"
"Could I ride in that?" asked the girl, looking at the big, lumbering conveyance, doubtfully.
"It carried 6,000 pounds of freight to Los Angeles, little woman," answered Steffins, promptly, "and I guess you to left over 28 or 30 at the outside. I'll have the box filled in with spruce boughs and a lot of nice bunch grass, and put some comforts over that, and you'll be snug and tidy. You won't starve, either, not while there's meat running."
"And, say, Lew, she's got some stuff back at that place. Let the extra hand ride back with a packjack and bring it on. She'll tell him what to get."
"Sure! Tom Callahan can go."
"And give us some grub, Lew. I've hardly had a bite since yesterday morning."
An hour later, when the train was nearly ready to start, Follett took his wife to the top of the ridge and showed her, a little way below them, the cedar at the foot of the sandstone ledge. He stayed back, thinking she would wish to be there alone. But when she stood by the new grave she looked up and beckoned to him.
"I wanted you by me," she said, as he reached her side. "I never knew how much he was to me. He wasn't big and strong like other men, but now I see that he was very dear and more than I suspected. He was quiet and always so kind—I don't remember that he was ever stern with me once.
And though he suffered from some great sorrow and from sickness, he never complained. He wouldn't even admit he was sick, and he always tried to smile in that little way he had, so gentle. Poor, sorry little father!—and yesterday not one of them would be his friend. It broke my heart to see him there so wistful when they turned their backs on him.
Poor little man! And see, here's another grave all grown around with sage and the stones worn smooth; but there's the cross he spoke of. It must be some one that he wanted to lie beside. Poor little sorry father!
Oh, you will have to be so much to me!"
The train was under way again. In the box of the big wagon, on a springy couch of spruce boughs and long bunch grass, Prudence lay at rest, hurt by her grief, yet soothed by her love, her thoughts in a whirl about her.

Follett, mounted on Dandy, rode beside her wagon.
"Better get some sleep yourself, Rool," urged Steffins.
"Can't Lew. I ain't sleepy. I'm too busy thinking about things, and I have to watch out for my little girl there.
You can't tell what these cusses might do."
"There's 30 of us watching out for her now, young fellow."
"There'll be 31 till we get out of this neighborhood, Lew."
He lifted up the wagon cover softly a little later, and found that she slept.
As they rode on, Steffins questioned him.
"Did you make that surround you was going to make, Rool?"
"No, Lew, I couldn't. Two of them was already under, and, honest, I couldn't have got the other one any more than you could have shot your kid that day he up-ended the gravy dish in your lap."
"Hell!"
"That's right! I hope I never have to kill anyone, Lew, no matter how much I got a right to. I reckon it always leaves uneasy feelings in a man's mind."

Eight days later a tall, bronzed young man with yellow hair and quick blue eyes, in what an observant British tourist noted in his journal as "the not unpicturesque garb of a border ruffian," helped a dazed but very pretty young woman on to the rear platform of the Pullman car attached to the east-bound overland express at Ogden.

As they lingered on the platform before the train started they were hailed and loudly cheered, averred the journal of this same Briton, "by a crowd of the outlaw's companions, at least a score and a half of most disreputable-looking wretches, unshaven, roughly dressed, heavily booted, slouch-hatted (they swung their hats in a drunken frenzy), and to this rough ovation of some decency, waved her handkerchief and smiled repeatedly, though her face had seemed to be sad and there were tears in her eyes at that very moment."

At this response from the girl, the journal went on to say, the ruffians had redoubled their drunken pandemonium. And as the train pulled away, to the observant tourist's marked relief, the young outlaw on the platform had waved his own hat and shouted as a last message to one "Lew," that he "must not let Dandy get gandered up," nor forget "to tie him to grass."

Later, as the train shrieked its way through Echo canyon, the observant tourist, with his double-visored plaid cap well over his face, pretending to sleep overheard the same person across the aisle say to the girl:
"Now we're on our own property at last. For the next 60 hours we'll be riding across our own front yard—and there ain't any keys and passwords and grips here, either—just a plain Almighty God with no nonsense about Him."

Whereupon had been later added to the journal a note to the effect that Americans are not only quite as prone to vaunt and brag and tell big stories as other explorers had asserted, but that in the west they were ready blas-phemers.

Yet the couple minded not the observant tourist, and continued to enlarge and complicate his views of American life to the very bank of the Missouri. Unwittingly, however, for they knew him not nor saw him nor heard him, being occupied with the matter of themselves.

"You'll have to back me up when we get to Springfield," he said to her one late afternoon, when they neared the end of their exciting journey.
"I've heard that old Grandpa Corson is mighty peppery. He might take you away from me."

Her eyes came in from the brown rolling of the plain outside to light him with their love; and then, the lamps having not yet been lighted, the head of grace nestled suddenly on its pillow of brawn with only a tremulous sigh of security for answer.

This brought his arm quickly about her in a protecting clasp, plainly in the sidelong gaze of the now scandalized but not less observant tourist.
