Getting Business

The purchasing public do not spend their money because of an individual

Do not blame the clerk. Some business men believe if they hire help from their competitors they can go on asking big money for their goods and any honest buyer will pay the price because of the individual who sells it. If the clerk does not sell he is soon disposed of and another break is made. This class of business is what is called pipe dreams or the effect of an intoxicated mind. A poor clerk does not feel justified, if honest, in asking a friend to pay two prices for their merchandise—that is why they cannot stay in the employ of some merchants. Any honest, clean, conscientious person can sell goods if properly bought. They do not have to be professional deceivers. That is why you find the same
