During the primary election Tuesday there was some question as to the legality of ordering the saloons closed on that occasion. In a number of exchanges where the subject was referred to, the saloons in every instance were closed. Some construed the law, that saloons might be opened but could not sell liquor, that would be a terrible aggravation to both the saloon keepers and the thirsty. Imagine a saloon open and not permitted to sell. In speaking of the subject the Herald, Luverne says:--By request of interested parties, Mayor Woodrow telegraphed the attorney general and received the following reply: "Chapter 292, law of 1900, prohibits the sale of liquor and keeping saloons open on special and general election days. While doubts exist I think this act applies to primary elections." A St. Paul wholesale liquor house telegraphed its agent here during the day with the advice to remain closed.
