Rules in Banking

A Bank Depositor should always keep his Pass Book in his own custody except when left at the bank to be posted.

In a bank as well as any other well regulated business there is a time for every part of our work and it is necessary that things be done on time. The time for balancing pass books is at the close of each month's business. Every depositor should therefore leave his pass book the last day or two of the month. If not left then they cannot be so promptly balanced as the bank or its customers could wish.

In Depositing: Always make out your own Deposit Slip then the Teller can check your items with the slip and more readily discover errors. See that the amount is correctly entered in your pass book. Always bring your book. If forgotten always take a duplicate "slip". Your deposits or Savings account will be APPRECIATED at the
