Washington Notes

Washington D. C. April 19, 1908. Quite the most important move of the government recently was the announcement of the Attorney General this week that Chas. E. Hughes of insurance investigation fame, and Alexander Simpson Jr., a prominent lawyer of Philadelphia, had been retained as special counsel for the government in the cases about to be instituted against the coal and oil roads for violation of various anti-trust laws. It is said that the Department of Justice already has in its possession facts that warrant criminal prosecution of a number of the big trunk lines for violations of the Inter-state Commerce Law, the Sherman Anti-Trust Law and the Elkins Anti-Rebate Law. The prosecution on it to be directed principally against the so called "hard coal combine" in the Pennsylvania anthracite region and the "soft coal combine" around Pittsburgh and southward. It is promised that the testimony will be a revelation as to the enormous profit that the railroads have made out of the transportation of the coal that they practically and in many cases actually own.

Some of the facts have been in the possession of the Department of Justice for some time past and there are others that have been elicited since the Inter-state Commerce Commission has been hearing testimony in Philadelphia and Baltimore on the subject of the coal and oil roads as directed by the Tillman-Gillespie resolution. These hearings are just started and will be continued at Washington, Pittsburgh and other points where the Commission thinks there is information worth getting. The information will finally be turned over to the Department of Justice to aid in the prosecution of the cases, but the President is determined that there shall be no such fiasco as wound up the cases of the Beef Packers who escaped prosecution with the plea of having furnished the government with the information on which it intended to base its cases.

There is revival of the third term talk in the case of President. It is being said that his recent utterances on the subject of an income and an inheritance tax, the special message to Congress on the failure of the law in the packers cases and the preparations for the coal road prosecutions are all intended to enhance his popularity and force the Republican party to press on him the Presidential nomination in 1908. What may develop by 1908 is very hard to tell. But up to date the President has laughed at all of the third term talk and put it aside with the remark that he had made one announcement on the subject of a third term and that he did not intend to make any more. In relation to the income tax speech, however, there has been a remarkable industry displayed on the part of many people who were not authorized to speak for the President, in explaining that he did not mean at all what he said in the now famous speech. This is not the impression that has been gained by visitors to the White House who have talked with the President. He has not forced his ideas on anyone, but to all inquirers, he showed that he was calmly convinced that what he said was all right and that the country would come to his way of thinking, in fact that the country was already of his way of thinking, and that the only change of front that would be necessary was on the part of Congress which would see the necessity of seriously considering the legislation that he had suggested.

Mr. Gutteresen's Position.

The St. Paul Dispatch is pleased with Mr. Gutteresen's platform excepting that part of it which relates to the tariff. The Dispatch finds fault with the word "conservative" as applied to revision and says that it may mean a revision upward. People generally will not construe it to mean that, as they could hardly expect an opponent of Mr. McCleary to take such a position, inasmuch as the present incumbent is the high priest of standpatters. Besides Mr. Gutteresen declares that he is in favor of the removal of the tariff from trust-made goods, and up to date Mr. McCleary has not so declared himself; in fact he is not favorable to such a proposition, and it could not be expected that he would go back on the masters he has so faithfully served. The only out-and-out declaration that Congressman McCleary has made relative to the question is that one in which he favored a revision upward, piling on more tariff and thus enabling the trusts to further plunder the people. Mr. Gutteresen is opposed to this policy and would remove the tariff from trust-made articles and relieve the public from a burden which they are now suffering. In other words Mr. Gutteresen would properly revise the tariff. He is a supporter of the Roosevelt idea that The Dispatch refers to, and if the people of the second district elect him as their representative he will gladly favor those wise policies advocated by the president which, if put into practice, will be beneficial to the whole people. Mr. Gutteresen believes that conditions are now ripe for a change in the schedules, not a revision upwards, but downwards, not along free trade lines, but a wholesome revision that will lift burdens, and at the same time give industries that need protection a full measure.—Mankato Free Press.
