A Skeleton in the Hold.

The City of Chester left Liverpool September 24th and arrived here yesterday. When the main hatch was opened at 5 o'clock yesterday evening, to the astonishment of those present, the form of a man more like a skeleton than anything else, was found lying on the deck. Restoratives were given and he revived sufficiently to say his name was James Donnelly. He then became unconscious again. Medical aid was summoned and the unfortunate man found in a terrible condition. He had been in the hold eleven days, almost without anything to eat or drink. His bones nearly protruded through his skin, his eyes and face were sunken, his lips were shriveled, and his tongue, which protruded from his mouth, resembled a piece of dry leather. He said he came from Dunbarton, Scotland. He went on board the vessel on the night of September 23d slightly intoxicated, but how he got into the hold he could not tell.
