Has Tenneyson Degenerated?

[Full Mail Gazette.] Every man who reads has an interest in raising the standard of literature, and every man who thinks is concerned to see that the ideas conveyed to him by his favorite author shall be couched in intelligible language. Now, the ordinary reader—the man or the woman—who understands and appreciates good writing—that is writing which is clear, sensible and pervaded by a noble train of thought—has been much puzzled of late years to see one great author after another lapse into a style which our blunt-spoken fathers would have called jargon. They affect the use of polysyllabic nouns and qualify them with scientific adjectives, in total contempt apparently of the axiom long ago set forth by Boileau that the adjective is the very worst enemy of the substantive.

Boileau was himself a master of style. You may take up any one of his satires without finding a line which would puzzle the intellect of a fairly educated reader. The thoughts follow each other in logical order; they are put into polished and tuneful language; and your only wonder, as you read, is that the poet should have been able to find his rhymes so easily, without the slightest apparent effort. But compare with these writings of Boileau's the latter-day effusions of Mr. Victor Hugo and of Mr. Tenneyson. Mr. Tenneyson has just published in the Nineteenth Century a sort of ode which contains such lines as these: "Infinite Ideality! Immeasurable Reality! Infinite Personality! Hallowed be Thy Name!—Halleluiahs!" and wherein he goes on to say: We feel that we are nothing—for all is Thou and in Thee; We feel we are something—that also has come from Thee; We are nothing, O, Thou—but Thou wilt help us to be.

Hallowed be Thy name—Halleluiahs! Why should we be called upon to admire such twaddle as this? The poet and his friends may say that we have missed or misapprehended his "subtle" meaning; but we have caught it perfectly, and affirm that there is no sublimity in it—that it is a mere commonplace, put into the poorest and most unmelodious language. It lacks rhythm, rhyme, and everything that goes to make up true poetry. It is the sort of thing which would not be accepted from a schoolboy, and which when put forth by a laureate in colossal type suggests mournful reflections as to the state of intellectual degeneration at which a great poet may arrive.

The Case of the Rev. H. H. Hayden.

[New Haven Journal.] A rumored impending new trial for the Rev. H. H. Hayden is denied. The State's Attorney says he knows nothing about any new trial for Mr. Hayden, and says he don't think there will be a new trial unless new evidence is discovered. Mr. Watrous has not heard anything of the kind, and thinks a new trial improbable. Mr. Hayden has been interviewed at his house in Water street, and has no intimation of the kind, but heard that detectives were at work, and has heard indefinite rumors of a new trial. Mr. Hayden declared that no one more than himself desired a new trial, but that he was ill able to stand the expense of another one. He said that the last trial cost him $7,000, a big sum for a poor man. His father was responsible for the amount, but he hopes, if his health is spared him, to work till the debt is paid. He had, he concluded, no fear of another trial, and was ready whenever wanted. Sheriff Byrbee, acting under orders, went to Madison Monday in an effort to find Mr. Hayden's chest in which he kept his tools when he worked at carpentering.

A Pretty German Costume.

[London Telegraph.] A pretty May costume still obtains in the more primitive villages of Suabia, Bavaria, and the Tyrol, distant from the great railway routes, and comparatively untouched by the prosaic temper of contemporary German culture. On the first Sunday of the flowery month the unmarried girls of the hamlet, armed with leafy bows, visit in procession the young wives who have been wed during the past year, and make formal inquiry, in certain set phrases hallowed by long custom, with respect to their health and happiness. Etiquette prescribes that each married woman thus distinguished should receive her maiden visitors at the outer door of the house, before which they take up their stand in double line. After thanking them for their kind inquiries, she passes slowly between their ranks, receiving from each in turn a light blow inflicted with the green branches, as a mark of maidenly approval of her faithfulness to their original sisterhood.

Having endured this gentle discipline, she is expected, according to her husband's means, to make a pecuniary offering to the vestal hand, and the total amount of this quaint May-day collection is expended by the village girls in an evening festivity, to which they invite the marriageable bachelors of the village. At this merry-making all the outlay for musicians and refreshments is defrayed by the youthful hostesses, who, however, reserve to themselves the privileges of "engaging partners." The whole picturesque ceremonial was performed the other day at Tunxdorf, near Pappenburg, with strict fidelity to traditions that have been traced back to the Middle Ages, and probably owe their origin to an even earlier period of German history.

At Tiflis in Transcaucasia some Jews have been on trial charged with using Christian blood in their Passover ceremonies and with killing a small child for the purpose. A trial lasting only six hours, resulted in their acquittal and the public prosecutor was so sensible to the absurdity of the charge that he declined to make the usual speech in prosecuting the case.

How the Tiger Hides.

[Sports and Work.] George was after a fine male tiger. He was followed up fast, but coming to a broad mullah, full of water, he suddenly lost sight of his game. He looked up and down the bank, and on the opposite bank, but could see no traces of the tiger. Looking down he saw in the water what he first took to be a large bull-frog. There was not a ripple on the placid, stagnant surface of the pool. He marveled much, and just then his mahout pointed to the supposed bull-frog, and in an excited whisper implored George to fire. A keen look convinced George that it really was the tiger. It was totally immersed, all but the face, and lying so still that not the faintest motion or ripple was perceptible. He fired and inflicted a terrible wound. The tiger bounded madly forward, and George gave it its quietus through the spine. A nearly similar case occurred to old Mr. C. A tiger bolted toward a small tank or pond, and though the line followed up in hot pursuit, the brute disappeared. Old C., keener than the others, was loth to give up the pursuit, but presently discovered a yellowish reflection in the clear water. Peering more intently, he could discover the yellowish, tawny outline of the cunning animal, totally immersed in the water, save its eyes, ears and nose. He shot the tiger dead, and it sank to the bottom like a stone. So perfectly had it concealed itself that the other sportsmen could not for the life of them imagine what old C. had fired at till his mahout got down and began to haul the dead animal out of the water.

What Becomes of Fijian Widows.

[Chambers' Journal.] There is no uniformity of custom in Fiji, so that no description of what is done by any one tribe can be taken as applicable to all the others. The strangling of widows, however, that they might be buried with their dead husbands seems to have been everywhere practiced. The widow's brother performs the operation, and is thenceforward treated with marked respect by his brother-in-law's kinsfolk who present him with a piece of land, over which the strangling cord is hung up. Should he, however, fail to strangle his sister, he is despised. When a woman is about to be strangled, she is made to kneel down and the cord (a strip of native cloth) is put round her neck. She is then told to expel her breath as long as possible, and when she can endure no longer, to stretch out her hands as a signal, whereupon the cord is tightened and soon all is over. It is believed that if this direction be followed, insensibility ensues immediately on the tightening of the cord, whereas if inhalation has taken place there is an interval of suffering.

Mr. Gilbert Board the Pinafore.

[London World.] Like the survivor of the captain and the crew of the Nancy brig, Mr. Gilbert has absorbed in himself the functions of manager, stage-manager, scene-painter, author and actor. His method of procedure is worthy of study, as he pursues it in its earliest stages at his house in the Boltons, an oasis of South Kensington and the center of a kind of artistic colony, or on board of his yacht, the Pleione, a schooner of sixty-three tons, quite used to the sea, for she made a voyage to the Black Sea and Iceland before she became the property of her present owner. On board the Pleione Mr. Gilbert writes his piece—that is, performs the smallest part of his work—with infinite comfort.

His great collie dog, Roy, lies down at his elbow; and as the Pleione slips along, ideas follow swiftly enough. Blank verse, a favorite medium of Mr. Gilbert, comes easier afloat than ashore. The author of "Pygmalion" is strongly in favor of verse competition. Prose is well enough in its way; but blank verse compels severe attention, and rhyming verse is most precious on account of its suggestiveness. "Way 'Pin fore"; "it is asked, as fresh cigars are lighted; "what a neat and lucky name!" "Pinafore," the author explains, was suggested entirely by the rhyme. "Three cheers more," sung when the "gallant captain" comes on board, must have something to rhyme to it. "Semaphore" was the first idea; but this was subsequently set aside for "Pinafore."

PERSONAL MAGNETISM.

Discovery of a Scientific Cause for this Wonderful Human Force.

Why Some People are Marvelously Magnetic and Others Not at All.

How Magnetism can be Acquired and Controlled by Those Who Do Not Possess It.

A Few Forceful Facts.

There is present in every person a certain power, which, for want of a better name, has been called Personal Magnetism. In some it can hardly be perceived, while in others it is so powerful as to attract the attention of all. Many attempts have been made to account for it, but with only partial success. It is certainly not the result of the will power, nor of any special mental forces, because many persons who have little will and less mind are personally very magnetic. In chemical electricity the current is generated by the union of the solids in the battery with the liquid through dissolution. In the human battery it is reasonable to suppose magnetic force comes from some powerful union of the chemical elements which takes place in the system. This union must of necessity be carried on in the kidneys, and hence it marks them as the seat of magnetic power in the body. These members generate the liquid elements with which the system comes in contact, and a mysterious force which can not be understood nor explained and can only be felt. This power varies in individuals just in proportion as the organs which produce it are powerful or weak. Destroy the kidneys and you destroy the personal magnetism which they cause. Restore the kidneys and you bring back the power which they alone can produce. This is a new truth but one which the experience of every careful observer will confirm. It shows the great necessity of keeping the kidneys in a healthy condition, for not only the joys of health, the certainty of a long life, but one of the great powers of life are dependent upon them. So mysterious have their operations been in the past that scientists supposed they were beyond their power, and Bright's disease has been considered as fatal as consumption. It has been proven beyond a doubt, however, that the pure West India leaf extract known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure will restore and regulate the organs in every case. Its value to humanity can thus readily be seen. If perfect health, long life and Personal Magnetism are desired the kidneys must be kept in perfect order, and there is one certain way by which this can be done, which is by employing the valuable remedy above named and keeping it constantly on hand. As progress in every part of the land will be difficult to make, while the end is most desirable.
