Great Slaughter.

A great battle has been fought between the French and Sardinians, and the Austrians, at Magenta, near the city of Milan. The French and Austrian accounts are contradictory, yet allowing for all discrepancies, there was great slaughter in the conflict, and the Austrians suffered most in the encounter. It is estimated that about 40,000 men perished in the battle! What horrible carnage! Some of the English papers think it probable that a peace will soon be effected upon a basis honorable, if not satisfactory to the belligerent parties, while others are of opinion that the war has only fairly commenced, and that before it close all the powers in Europe will be engaged in it. What will be the result, in this later event, no one can conjecture. While we cannot control the movements of the bloodthirsty spirits in the Old World, we will await the report with painful interest.

Naturalized Citizens.

The letter of Gen. Cass to Mr. Felix Le Class, a French gentleman residing near Memphis, Tenn., requesting information as to the force and virtue of our naturalization laws, in case of adopted citizens returning to their mother country in time of war, was so unsatisfactory and had so many contradictory constructions put upon it, that the Department of State has seen fit to make the views of the Administration known in a letter to A. V. Hoffer, of Cincinnati. The European States claim, during life, the services of persons now within their dominions and do not recognize any system by which they may throw off their allegiance to their native country and become citizens of another, and hence would feel disposed to pay no attention to the laws of the United States in that respect.

The letter to Mr. Hoffer is very clear as to the opinion of the Administration upon the subject. It declares that in the case of a naturalized citizen returning to the mother country, no right to make him perform military duty exists, unless he was in the army or called into it at the time he left. In such a case, our government would not feel called upon to interfere. He is then looked upon by the country he abandoned as a deserter, as one who owed service that he did not pay, and it claims the right to make him perform his undischarged duty whenever found within the bounds of their jurisdiction. But, if an emigrant who had never been summoned to perform military duty and owed no service when he came away, is, upon his return, compelled to enter the army, the United States would consider it to be an overreaching of authority. Our government is opposed to the doctrine of perpetual allegiance and maintains the right of expatriation, and the right to form political ties elsewhere. This doctrine is not concurred in by all the European nations. Any native of France or Russia, now returning, would run the risk of being forced into the army, and even if our government should interfere, it would be unable to procure his release, until after a long period of time had elapsed, if it could procure it at all. It would be the part of prudence, therefore, for naturalized citizens from either of the above mentioned countries not to return during the present war, unless desirous of rendering assistance to the arms of their countrymen. In time of peace, when soldiers are needed only to keep up the standing army, they would incur no danger but during the present contest which will call forth hundreds of thousands of soldiers they might be compelled to enter the army by conscription.

As there is no international law upon the subject, those governments would undoubtedly insist upon the right claimed by them, and the persons would be without remedy. It is easy to say that our government would not permit this; that should would not suffer the rights of her acknowledged citizens to be trampled upon, but would go to war, as she did with Great Britain in 1812. Even if she did it would be little avail to the citizen himself, for before negotiations could be entered into, he might be forced into an enemy's prison, from which it would be impossible for either his native or adopted country to rescue him, even if they were so disposed. Such being the state of the case, the plain course for foreign born citizens to pursue, who do not wish to be involved in such difficulties, is to remain in the United States until the clouds of war, which now hang over Europe, shall have been dispersed, upon which occurrence they can return in safety. It seems to us that the view taken by the venerable Secretary of State, that our government should not recognize any rights which foreign governments claim over our naturalized citizens is the correct one, but, as we before stated, there are other nations to consult, and before they could be induced to coincide in our opinions, we might become involved in war and bloodshed. Accordingly the best plan our foreign born citizens can adopt is to remain in the United States for the present, unless they are particularly desirous of joining the armies of their native country. Should such a casualty occur, as that of one of our adopted citizens being pressed into service and our government compelled to engage in war on that account, the Republican party would, without doubt, charge the Democratic Administration with being the author of the conflict, although it is now making every effort to ward off any difficulty of that nature.

The New York Express thinks that the "art of lying is probably best learned in the manufacturing of War Bulletins. It is difficult to say which is the more perfect in the trade—the French or the Austrians—but we conclude they are about even."

The New York Sun publishes a lengthy article stating that Napoleon made an effort to steal the remains of Napoleon the Great from the Hospital of Invalides, Paris, and thought he had them safe in New York, when he discovered that he had been cheated, and that, instead of the Imperial dead, he had possession of an Egyptian mummy.

Baron's creditors don't appear to think that great "failure" of his was entirely total, so to speak, when he refused seventy-five per cent. on unsecured paper to the amount of $30,000; or else they have pretty strong confidence in his future prospects. Which is it? Perhaps both.

The Piedmontese papers state that Colonel Morelli, after being seriously wounded, went to his wife the following lines: "I am covered with glory and with wounds; I have, I feel, only a few minutes to live, but I wish that my last thought should be for you and for my country."

It is stated that a man named Clarke living at Jamestown, Ky., has had the hydrophobia for twelve years and still lives. He has a spasmodic every day which he relieves by a dose of lobelia, and in that way keeps himself along.

About twelve years since, Dr. Gregory, then living in Geneva, New York, lost a purse containing $300, of which no trace was ever found, until a few weeks since, when the Recorder of Geneva advertised the money, stating that the person who had found it had become religious and felt that he could no longer keep property which did not honestly belong to him.

Mr. David L. Hamilton, of Richmond, Ontario Co., writes to the Canadian Times, that he has just taken from a merino buck a fleece of wool, of ten months and six days growth, which weighed 19 pounds! And from a ewe of the same blood, a fleece of one year's growth which weighed 16 pounds.

A Boston paper states that of 750 clergymen attending the late anniversary in that city, but 73 wore the professional badge, the white cravat. The growth of hair on the faces of many of the divines, was another sign that they are willing to stand as men among men, and to find their appropriate distinctions in something of more consequence than peculiarities of costume.

The Utics, (New York Herald) says that Mr. Gates, of Frankfort, Herkimer county, has made during the last eighteen years, about 4,555,000,000 matches, using 2,500,000 feet of lumber. He now makes 2,750,000 matches daily, using five of 500 feet of lumber. He uses five pounds of phosphorus daily, which is about the amount found in the bones of a single horse. He has thus used up the skeletons of about 2,000 horses.

A correspondent of the London Star, writing from Alexandria on the 29th of May, says: It is incredible the immense amount of stores of all kinds that are brought up from Genoa almost hourly; in fact the loading keeps up one incessant shriek, from morning till night, and even the hours usually devoted to repose are broken in upon by the urgency of the service; fatigue parties of soldiers relieve each other at regular intervals, discharging the wagons, and huge piles of warlike material encumber the approaches to the station.

A woman living in Manchester, N. H., having quarrelled with her husband, in a fit of anger and despondency took a dose of strychnine. When the poison began to do its deadly work, she was seized with mortal terror, begged in most heart rending terms to be saved, and in her shrieks for mercy and writings of agony, presented a spectacle of woe which was utterly indescribable and appalled the stoutest heart. Her horrid death should be a warning to all would-be suicides.

The German metallurgists have just discovered that the metal tungsten, mixed with steel, in the proportion of 80 of the latter and 20 of the tungsten, forms a very valuable alloy, harder even than steel itself. It is said that, in consequence, old tin mines are being again brought into use, for the sake of the tungstates of iron and lime, (wolfram and scheelite) formerly picked out from the tin ore and thrown away as useless.

Kosuth's Position.—Kosuth, in a note to the Times correcting misrepresentations, says: "The purport of my argument is this: If England abstains from taking a part in this war, the war will remain restricted to the Austrians and the Italian people. On the contrary, England's intervention, if not well timed, will become a general European one, because Germany will not plunge into the war if she is not supported by England; and in this case Russia, too, will remain neutral; but if England should directly support Austria or assist Germany in supporting her, then Russia will step in, but on the opposite side—she will support France. So that if the present war assumes general European proportions, it will be entirely the work of England's intervention."
