Poetry.

MEMORIES.

BY GEORGE D. PRENTICE.

Once more, once more, my Mary dear,
I sit by that lone stream,
Where within thy timid ear,
I breathed love's burning dream;
The birds we loved still tell their tales
Of music on each spray,
And still the wild rose dinks the vale—
But thou art far away.

In vain thy vanished form I seek,
By wood and stream and dell,
And tears of anguish burn my cheek
Where tears of rapture fell;
And yet beneath those wild and bowers
Dear thoughts my soul employ,
For in the memories of past hours,
There is a mournful joy.

Upon the air thy gentle words
Around me seem to thrill,
Like sounds upon the wild harp's chords
When all the winds are still,
Or like the low, sweet, low, sweet
Of that wild spirit-tone,
Which haunts the hollow of the bush
When its sad chiming is gone.

I seem to hear thee speak my name
In sweet, low murmurs now,
I seem to feel thy breath of flame
Upon my cheek and brow;
On my cold lips I feel thy kiss,
Thy heart to mine is laid,
Alas! that such a dream of bliss
Like other dreams must fade!

Miscellaneous.

Duel between Randolph and Henry Clay.

Hugh Garland of Virginia, has just written a life of John Randolph, from which we extract the following description of the memorable duel between the Roanoke orator, and his great rival, Henry Clay:

"The night before the duel," says Gen. James Hamilton, of S. Carolina, Mr. Randolph sent for me. I found him calm, but in a singularly kind and confiding mood. He told me that he had something on his mind to let me. He then remarked, 'Hamilton, I have determined to receive, without returning, Clay's fire; nothing shall induce me to harm a hair of his head. I will not make his wife a widow, or his children orphans. Their tears would shed over his grave; but when the sod of Virginia rests on my bosom, there is not in this world one individual to pay this tribute upon mine.' His eyes filled, and resting his head upon his hand, he remained some moments silent. I replied, 'My dear friend (for ours was a sort of posthumous friendship, bequeathed by our mothers.) I deeply regret that you have mentioned this subject to me; for you call upon me to go to the field and see you shot down, or to assume the responsibility, in regard to your own life, in sustaining your determination to throw it away. But on this subject, a man's own conscience and his own honor are his best monitors. They will not advise, but under the enormous and unprovoked personal insult you have offered Mr. Clay, I cannot dissuade. I feel bound, however, to communicate to Col. Tattall your decision. He begged me not to do so, and said he was very much afraid that Tattall would take the studs and refuse to go out with him.' I, however, sought Col. Tattall, and we repaired about midnight to Mr. Randolph's lodgings, whom we found reading Milton's great poem. For some moments he did not permit us to say one word in relation to the approaching duel; and he at once commenced one of those delightful criticisms on a passage of his poet, in which he was wont so enthusiastically to indulge. After a pause, Col. Tattall remarked, 'Mr. Randolph, I am told you have determined not to return Mr. Clay's fire; I must say to you, my dear sir, if I am only to go out to see you shot down, you must find some other friend.' Mr. R. remarked that it was his determination. After much conversation on the subject, I induced Col. T. to allow Mr. Randolph to take his own course, as his fire; to you, my dear sir, if I am only to go out to see you shot down, you must find some other friend.' Mr. R. remarked that it was his determination. After much conversation on the subject, I induced Col.
