THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL
Great Speech of Hon. Lyman Trumbull, of Ill.
DELIVERED IN THE SENATE APRIL 8, IN REPLY TO THE VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. President, I fully share the regret of the President that he is unable to sign the bill which has been passed by the United States in their civil rights, and secure the means of their violation. I regret it on my own account, because the bill was passed by a large majority of the Senate, and the President before its introduction into the Senate has been disappointed, because the bill has been calculated to give to the colored people the same rights as are given to the white people, and to secure to them the same protection as is given to the white people. I regret it on the account of the President's own people, because the bill is a measure of justice, and it is a measure of justice to the colored people, and it is a measure of justice to the white people. I regret it on the account of the President's own people, because the bill is a measure of justice, and it is a measure of justice to the colored people, and it is a measure of justice to the white people.

...the President in his annual message, says: "The American system rests on the foundation of the great principle of equal liberty, and the preservation of that principle is the duty of every citizen." There is a case reported in 10, Johnson which goes much further than this, and which decides, not simply that a citizen of the United States, as such, is entitled to protection in these rights, but that an alien enemy, who is permitted to reside in this country during a time of war, is to be protected in all those rights. In giving the opinion of the court in the case of Clark v. Mory, reported in 10 Johnson, 71, the court says: "A lawful residence implies protection, and a citizenry to be and to be. A citizenry to be and to be. A citizenry to be and to be."

...The President tells us that the bill is unconstitutional, and that it is a measure of justice to the colored people, and it is a measure of justice to the white people. I regret it on the account of the President's own people, because the bill is a measure of justice, and it is a measure of justice to the colored people, and it is a measure of justice to the white people. I regret it on the account of the President's own people, because the bill is a measure of justice, and it is a measure of justice to the colored people, and it is a measure of justice to the white people.
