"My Policy" in New Orleans.

A Carnival of Blood and Murder Thrilling Sketch of an Incident Connected Therewith.

We clip the following sketch from the Philadelphia Watchman and Reflector, and ask for it the careful and candid perusal of every Christian man and woman:

LAST HOUR of a NEW ORLEANS MARTYR. "Good-by, Emma," he said. "I shall not be gone long. It can't take more than two minutes to open the Convention, and then I shall come right away. Look for me at three o'clock at farthest." and the young pastor kissed his wife and hurried away to the Convention.

That day was destined to be one among the most memorable in the annals of human wickedness since the famous St. Bartholomew's. The members of the Union Convention had looked forward to it with apprehension. They knew that the spirit of the late rebellion still survived in New Orleans, and that the municipal authorities should be permitted to assemble without some molestation from disorderly individuals, but they had no suspicion that the masses of the city would rise against them, organized for deliberate bloodshed. They did not know that all the arms had been bought up in the shops contained not so much as a pocket pistol. They did not know that the Mayor had telegraphed to the President that there would certainly be a riot, and received the assurance that the military would not interfere with the civil power. They did not know that the police force had been increased by the addition of a gang of blood-thirsty men, and that the municipal authorities had agreed upon signals, and arranged to begin the riot themselves. Watched by no suspicion, and awed by Butler's strong right hand, the conspirators were suffered to perfect their preparations, and when the morning of the 30th of July dawned, the treacherous officers of the station houses, fully-armed, and waiting the opportunity for their bloody work.

The pastor of the Coliseum Baptist Church, Rev. John W. Horton, had been requested to open the Convention with prayer. Moved by the warmest Christian sympathy for the freedmen, this young New England minister had gone to the South with his wife, to give his best energies to their welfare. He was a man of sincere piety and a large heart; pure as a little child, self-denying where a duty was concerned to an extent that often made him suffer, and that rendered him unpopular with the ignorant and even once fired upon, and though conscious that he was fatally marked by malignant disloyalists, he would never go armed.

After taking leave of his wife, Mr. Horton proceeded in the cars, from his residence in Carrollton, to the city. Ever alert to look hopefully on the worst prospects, and slow to suspect evil of his fellow-men, he had felt no fears of injury for this day, beyond perhaps a forcible seizure and commitment to the parish prison.

The hour arrived for opening the Convention, the ministers having entered the hall, stood up to offer prayer just as the clock struck twelve. Strongly and fervently his words came up, breathing petitions for the peace of his country and the deliverance of the oppressed. God heard him, but with that prayer his servant's work ended, and there he lay, as if a ray of light had been cast upon the darkness of his soul, and he might make that which was his. Immediately on the sounding of the stroke of noon from the city clock, and simultaneously with the opening of Mr. Horton's prayer, the armed police filed out of the several stations, and entered the hall, and marched to the front of the hall. Some of them entered the hall during the prayer, a mob in the meantime rapidly collecting round the door, and hardly had the good man uttered the closing "amen," when a miscreant fired a bullet at his head.

There could no longer be any doubt of the intention of the officers and the mob. The latter assailed the windows and rushed in at the doors. "Kill him! kill him!" they yelled. "Shoot every cursed Yankee in the house!" Just then all the bells in the city began to toll. It was the preconcerted signal of laughter, and now the horrid deed began to be perpetrated.

The disloyal ruffians rushed in with pistols, knives and clubs, and commenced their appointed work of murder. Resistance was hopeless. The Convention broke up in the wildest confusion, some of the members falling, and many mortally wounded. The Union men saw that they were doomed. Instead of protecting them and arresting the rioters at the firing of the first shot, as with their force they could easily have done, the police headed the attack, and there is reason to believe that one of their number fired the first shot.

Mr. Horton received five balls in his body and fell. These balls were fired by policemen. Not satisfied with their work, they seized him, kicked and dragged him over the pavement to the first station, the mob following behind, cursing, beating and manning his slaughter, and many mortally wounded. He lay in a pool of blood, his face mangled and senseless.

Meantime the shopkeepers of the city had closed their stores, and strolled about, greeting the murderers of Horton and every squad of policemen that passed, every man a bleeding loyalist, with shouts of "Good! good! Kill the white nigger!"

Around the Mechanics' Institute and in the adjacent streets upwards of one hundred negroes lay waiting in their blood, and the dead carts drove by, loaded with every corpse that life, all tumbled indiscriminately together.

In one of these carts the mangled Horton was flung after lying while at the station-house, and under a stifling load of dead and wounded negroes, his stomach crushed by a blow of a heavy plank, he was taken to the Marine Hospital.

Furious with the taste of blood, the police and their fellow Thugs roared up and down some of the streets of the city, calling out the names of well-known loyalists, declaring their intention to slaughter every loyal man in New Orleans, and in the midst of the excitement and carnage, however, the bayonets of Federal troops appeared, and further murder was prevented. The mob dispersed, and the blood-stained streets, and battered windows, and muffled groans from distant hospital wards, along with the horrors of the 30th of July, were the only things that the bloody day passed, the wife of Mr. Horton waited at her home, five miles distant, for his return. Three o'clock came, the limit he had set for his absence. She looked long and anxiously to catch a glimpse of him approaching along the familiar street. He did not come and her anxiety grew into alarm. To add to her terror, a breathless messenger arrived at her residence, and warned her that she would not be safe there that night, for trouble had happened at the State House, and the secessionists were searching for the Unionists in the city and suburbs. Hastily summoning the negro servant, she told her to bar the doors and windows, and with feverish hurried preparations then set off for the city to learn the fate of her husband.

Having formerly boarded with a Mrs. E., she took her way first to her house, and made known her anxious errand. She was told of the riot and massacre, and at once feared the worst. Several young men who boarded at the house volunteered to go with her to her husband's house, and returned late in the evening, but could give her no news save that he had been badly wounded.— They dared not communicate their own convictions of his fate.

Only the darkness of the dangerous streets and the restraint of friends prevented the almost distracted woman from going forth that night to continue the search herself. As it was, the night brought no sleep to her eyes, and as soon as it was morning she started on her sad errand.

Information had been received through the city papers that Gen. Baird, the military commander, had released all who had been arrested and confined by the police, giving the name of her husband among the rest, and stating that he had returned home. Acting on this representation she went alone to Carrollton, but only to return by the next train. He was not there. Without waiting to enquire of the house he returned to his headquarters; a young Methodist clergyman, Mr. Henry, one of Mrs. E.'s boarders, insisting on being her kinsman.

No sooner did Gen. Baird see Mrs. Horton and know who she was, than he expressed much surprise that her husband had not been seen, and told her he had been released. Perhaps she would find him at the City Hall. To this place she immediately went, but she searched in vain. He had not been there. She then hurried to the First Police Station, determined to write from the brutal officers a confession of the deed which had been committed. Entering the office, she forced her way within the rails, and asked the clerk what had been done with her husband. The man declared that "preacher Horton" had been sent by him to Charity Hospital, and she at once hurried thither. Again she was disappointed. He had not been there.

It had been reported that he had been sent to the Marine Hospital. The truth was the cart which carried Mr. Horton's body had stopped there, and been sent away, as it appeared to be occupied only by blacks. The horrible idea now suggested itself to the afflicted woman that her husband had been conveyed away with a load of dead bodies, and she had been left alive. But in her despair, she determined to visit the Marine Hospital. This was in a low and distant part of the city, and devoted entirely to negroes, and she could not have believed he would be carried there by his worst enemies, but at a friend's suggestion she sought the place, still accompanied by Mr. Henry.

Arrived at the gate, she was refused entrance, but catching a glimpse of Dr. Harris, the head surgeon, whom she knew, she called to him, and asked if her husband was there. Dr. Harris could give her no positive answer, but immediately ordered the servant to admit her. Forgetting her weariness in her joy that her long quest had at last succeeded, the faithful woman bounded up the steps, and without waiting to be directed, rushed in among the patients, found out her husband, and sank exhausted to the ground, with her head on his breast. The form she loved, a bruised and helpless mass of flesh and blood, his head swollen to the size of two, his left arm useless, and his right shattered and mangled. He moved perpetually about with the restless, nervous gestures of a dreaming infant. So badly frightened was his head and eyes, that she could not understand the inspired sagacity of a wife's affection.

"Wipe my face, Emma," he gasped, as if he had been bending over him ever since he fell.

Worn and broken-hearted the poor woman sat down by her husband's side, and tried to strengthen herself for the task of soothing and comforting his last hours, for she knew too well that he could not live. Nineteen long hours she had searched for him, and now to find him thus!

Few comforts were to be found in that hospital, though the attendants, seeing her distress, evidently meant to treat her kindly. Up to this time the wounded man had lain in the ward's room, but on the next morning, which was Wednesday, he was removed to a more airy apartment. The operation of trepanning was then performed on his head, though with little hope of permanent benefit. When this was over, and the burden upon the brain was thus relieved, the sufferer looked up and repeated

"When I can see my little dear, I will wipe my weeping eyes."

"Should I not weep against my soul's engage?" Here weakness prevented him, and he whispered to his wife, "You finish it."

He slept a good deal, but several times consisted of his wife's presence, frequently putting up his restless hand to touch her face, and remind himself, in his blindness, of her loved features. When he talked it was of his unfinished work, his convictions of the justice of the cause, in which he felt his anxieties for his wife lessened, and he would when he had an opportunity to exchange pulpits with a colored brother in the city, and said:

"Emma, we must send word to Bro. Miles, that I can't come. I don't feel quite well enough to preach."

As time went on his mind began to wander, and he fancied himself in his own pulpit. He invoked the Divine blessing, he gave out a hymn and more, wounded and suffering as he was, his wife, who wept as she thought of the melody of his fine voice, joining him at his request, half choked by her tears.— Then he prayed with her, sang again, and pronounced the words of the mouth speaker.

After these exercises he expressed his wish to close with the Lord's Supper, and immediately began the beautiful hymn. His wife, anxious to gratify him, skilfully aided with such meagre conveniences as were at hand, to carry out his touching fancy. He partook with her what seemed to him the symbolic bread and wine. As he both drank from the same cup, Emma," said he. Another hymn, a benediction, and the sufferer began to grow weak, as if indeed, his work was done.

"I am going now, Emma," he whispered. "I'm sorry you can't come with me. In the fall you'll come."

Then, and with more connected sentences, but incoherent syllables of prayer, and whispers of saintly hope. "In the vale—the vale—home yonder—good-by," and at six o'clock that Sabbath evening the gentle spirit of Horton fell asleep in Jesus.

Thus perished a martyr to freedom and equal rights, as sincere and true a man as God ever welcomed "through great tribulation" to the immortal pleasures of His presence.

To the tender consideration of her friends, never so numerous as now, and to the merited consolation of Almighty God, who never pitied her as he now pities her, we commend the weeping widow, and pray that she may long live to share the honor of her martyred husband's fame.

The Popular Judgment. (From Harper's Weekly.) The elections of this autumn are full of triumph for every man who honestly lives in the intelligence of the people. Indeed there is no hope, and of course no likelihood, for any one who does not. A man like Mr. Thurlow Weed, who never appreciated the force and value of the moral conviction which underlies popular government, and who is content to be a member of the society of those from whom the danger is now to be apprehended, as it has always preceded. Mr. Weed in the same breath complains of the appointment of a Copperhead to office by the President, and declares that he hopes a Copperhead may be named to office by the President. That is the exact measure of the value of his judgment.

But his hopes are being sadly disappointed. The elections show that there is no reaction, and that the whole weight and blanching of the Executive patronage are not in the hands of the very nature of the Government itself. And while such a party division exists no other is possible.

It seems to us very necessary that all Union men should constantly bear this fact in mind. While the present situation continues, while part of the States are unprotected, and the Union is in jeopardy, and conditions they shall be admitted, all other debate is impertinent and disastrous, except as a discussion of expediency within the party. If a Union man who favors protection sees Congress inclining to free-trade or a free-trade Unionist sees signs of a tariff, let him remember that the Union may be lost, and an evil sufficient to drive him in ordinary times from the party, yet now the alternative is support of the Union party or surrender of the Government to the party which is still warm with the effort to destroy it.

The grand proof of the capacity of the people is that they see this just as plainly as any man can state it. They have not gone astray in the mists of theories of trade, or upon any point of mere material expediency, but they have held steadily to the principle of the national existence. If they remember that the Union is made up of men from Maine to Iowa, it is the voice of fidelity to this essential necessity which is heard ringing out of the mines of Pennsylvania, and over the prairies of Indiana. When the national security is beyond doubt—when the unrepresented States have returned under just conditions, and the ground is firm beneath our feet, then we may turn to other issues, and other parties will arise upon secondary policies and expediencies.

Be Cheerful at Your Meals. The benefit derived from food taken depends very much upon the condition of the body while eating. If the system is unwell, the digestion is imperfect, and the food is not properly assimilated, and the body is not properly nourished. It is not uncommon to see a man who is very healthy and strong, and who is very cheerful, and who is very successful in his business, and who is very happy in his home, and who is very contented in his life, and who is very satisfied in his soul, and who is very pleased in his heart, and who is very glad in his mind, and who is very joyful in his spirit, and who is very merry in his countenance,
