

Contagious Blood Poison

Is the name sometimes given to what is generally known as the BAD DIS-EASE. It is not confined to dens of vice or the lower classes. The purest and best people are sometimes infected with this awful malady through handling the clothing, drinking from the same vessels, using the same toilet articles, or otherwise coming in contact with persons who have contracted it.

It begins usually with a little itching, a red eruption breaks out on the body, sores and ulcers appear in the mouth, the throat becomes ulcerated, the hair, eye brows and lashes fall out; the blood becoming more contaminated, copper colored spots and pustular eruptions and sores appear upon different parts of the body, and the poison even destroys the worst forms. It is a perfect antidote for the powerful virus that pollutes the blood and penetrates to all parts of the system. Unless you get this poison out of your blood it will ruin you, and being disfigure and disease upon your children, for it can be transmitted from parent to child. S. S. S. contains no mercury or potash, but is guaranteed a strictly vegetable compound.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

A Wild Night at Woodriver.

"Keep that kid quiet," said Bankers in a hoarse whisper. "I'm doing the best I can," said his wife, trying to hush the little one who was sobbing and moaning in her lap. In the baby's milk-wagon a bitter fight was going on between pargoric and pain, and the latter was dying hard. The wind drove the rain against the side of the car, and made it rock to and fro. "Emma," said Mrs. Bankers to her friend, "take that bottle and hold it between you and a crack in the car, and when it lightens, drop ten drops into the spoon—I suppose we must not strike a light."

"You bet you don't strike any light here unless you are ready to give up your chignon," said Bankers, without taking his eyes from the crack through which he was peeping. Emma took the bottle, and at each flash of lightning dropped a drop of hush medicine into the spoon, and when she had put in ten drops they gave it to the baby. That made twenty drops; it was dangerous—but it was sure death to all of them if the baby cried aloud.

The rain came in great sheets and with such force that it seemed that the car could hardly hold the rail. It was not a Pullman car; just a common red stock car, standing on a siding, with a few armfuls of straw upon the floor. Occasionally Bankers turned to glance at the two women, who were crouching in one end of the car, and when the lightning lit up their faces they were fearful to behold. Now the rain, cold as sleet, came through the cracks in the car, and stung the faces of those within. Mrs. Bankers had seen three winters at Woodriver, but her friend, a young woman who had come out to Western Nebraska to teach school, was in every sense a "tenderfoot," and the experience of this wild night had almost driven her mad.

"There they are," whispered Bankers.

The women their eyes to a crack, and when a flash came they could see a reef of feathered heads that formed a half-circle around a house, like a feather box about a woman's neck. Half the band dismounted, and made a rush for the cottage. The door was broken, and the red devils swarmed in. One of them took a newspaper and lighted it at the open fire place to make a torch, and by the light of it the little party in the stock car could see the Sioux running, halting, crouching from room to room, in search of the occupants. Finding the place deserted, and smarting under their disappointment, the Indians now set fire to the house, and by the light of it started to loot the railroad station, which stood less than a hundred yards away.

The station agent had been warned, as the other had been, by a Pawnee scout, but had bravely refused to leave his post. He had made no light, but sat in one end of the dark little room which served as ticket office, telegraph office, and sleeping room, and, as the Indians appeared, opened fire. At the very first shot the leader of the murderous band leaped high into the air, came on his feet, leaped up again, and again, and finally fell in a heap to rise no more. With a deafening yell the angry band made a rush for the door, and began to beat against it with tomahawks, clubs, and guns.

Having emptied his rifle, the agent now took up a pair of forty-five caliber revolvers, and the lead fairly rattled against the door, and no less than a half dozen hair-lifters sank to the platform, causing the besiegers to fall back a pace. From a distance they began to pour the lead into the building, but the agent, crouching behind the little iron safe, was still unharmed. An Indian brought a torch from the burning cottage and attempted to fire the station, but the rain and wind put out the fire. Two or three Sioux, noticing a string of cars upon the siding, began to search for stock or eatable freight.

Among the Stock Cars, if they are still alive.

"Two Boys and a Mountain Lion" is the title of an article in St. Nicholas. The author is William Hough, and the scene is laid in the Santa Inez Mountains. At this moment the tall moonlight fell upon the tree-top and bathed it in a mellow radiance which at once revealed the outline of the panther's powerful form crouched close along the tree-trunk; and even lit up the tawny yellow of his skin. Instantly the great beast showed his dislike of the exposure by creeping farther on among the branches, heralding the move by a half-suppressed angry snarl.

Vernon was glad of the moment's respite in which to think. He argued that the lion would not descend a straight fall of twenty feet, but would first descend the tree-trunk part way, and then make his spring. He had already taken his stand near the lower end of the tree, and now he saw that the lion would be forced to advance straight toward him, which of course he would do slowly, and thus give him his opportunity.

"If he only waits till the moonlight comes!" thought Vernon, anxiously. For he knew that the moonlight touched the sights of his rifle, though he was not certain in his aim; and to fire the shotgun at that distance would be hazardous in the extreme, while to advance into the moonlight would be equally so, for he could then be covered at one spring from the panther's hiding place.

"Only wait, only wait, old fellow!" Vernon repeated to himself, with increasing anxiety, as the critical moment drew nearer.

But the panther was already creeping forward along the tree-trunk. As he emerged from the partial shelter he stopped, stood up to his full height, bared his teeth, and snarled a savage snarl of defiance. Vernon hadn't realized before how big and terrible he would look! For a moment he almost wished they were back in the cabin. Morton gasped him by the jacket at the back, and Dakergrowl a fierce, low, guttural growl, while every bristle along his back stood erect.

The panther surveyed the scene with a calmness and deliberation calculated to annoy any but the steadiest hand. He seemed to be weighing the relative costs of retreating and of advancing. Vernon was suddenly seized by a strong temptation to fire. But he knew that to miss the right spot by so much as an inch might be fatal—the moonlight on the ground before him was still three feet away! He was trying to get a better shot.

Then the panther began to advance. He crouched, and crept slowly forward step by step, snarling and laving back his ears in an ugly manner, while he kept his sleek, gleaming eyes fixed steadily upon the tree.

Vernon felt his flesh begin to creep and his hair to stiffen, and his heart suddenly jumped and began pounding against the wall of his chest. "He!" he said to his self, clearing his teeth and fists. It was over in an instant (Vernon was really a boy of splendid courage) and his thoughts were again fixed on the business before him—and none too soon!

The panther had stopped. He crouched lower. The tip of his long tail began to lash from side to side, his head was low and pushed far forward; his thin lips twitched nervously, and his ugly claws dug into the bark. Vernon did not need to be told that the lion meant to spring, and that a delay an instant would be fatal. The rifle rose to his shoulder—Ah! the moonlight fell full upon the sights. A rising roar was met by a clear sharp report, which rang back from the cliff and echoed again as a tawny body whirled through the air and fell in a shapeless, quivering mass on the ground below.

"Hurra!" shouted Morton, as the pent-up nervousness escaped in a wild yell of delight.

It was the proudest moment of Vernon's life as he looked down at the great beast outstretched form. "The standing up to it was the worst," said Vernon, as he thought of how he had to pull himself together when the panther began to creep toward him along the tree trunk, uttering that ugly, hissing snarl.

He stooped down and lifted the huge, black-shaped head, and saw that the bullet had passed through the brain and out on the back of the neck. "Must have smashed his neck, too," he said, thoughtfully. Then his eyes swept over the handsome length of the skin, and he exclaimed: "By George, but that'll make a trophy I say, Mott, we'll have it dressed and keep it! Old Mason'll do it for us." And as the idea caught their imaginations, they danced and circled about their prize in the moonlight like young savages and the walls of the canyon rang again and again with their glee.

For The Complexion.

The complexion always suffers from biliousness or constipation. Unless the bowels are kept open the impurities from the body appear in the form of unsightly eruptions. DeWitt's Little Early Risers keep the liver and bowels in healthy condition and remove the cause of such troubles. C. E. Hooper, Albany, Ga., says: "I took DeWitt's Little Early Risers for biliousness. I. They were just what I needed. I am feeling better now than in years. Never gripe or distress. Safe, thorough and gentle. The very best pills. L. R. Irwin.

Failed to Catch the Tune. A professor in an old Pennsylvania college was conducting a review in Latin. Of a sleepy looking youth he asked the question, "What construction is that at the top of page twelve?" "I don't know," was the prompt reply.

"Why not?" thundered the professor, "I have been harping on that construction all term."

"I know you have, professor," was the sly reply, "but I haven't caught the tune yet."

The Vice Of Naggling. Clouds the happiness of the home, but a nagging woman often needs help. She may be so nervous and run down in health that trifles annoy her. If she is melancholy, fretful, troubled with loss of appetite, headache, sleeplessness, constipation or fainting and dizzy spells, she needs Electric Bitters, the most wonderful remedy for ailing women. Thousands of sufferers from female troubles, nervous troubles, backache and weak kidneys have used it, and become healthy and happy. Try it. Only 50c. B. Schmitt guarantee satisfaction.

A Little Boy's Life Saved.

I have a few words to say regarding Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It saved my little boy's life and I feel that I cannot praise it enough. I bought a bottle of it when he was sick with a cold, and when I got home with it the poor baby could hardly breathe. I gave the medicine as directed every ten minutes until he "threw up" and then I thought sure he was going to choke to death. We had to pull the phlegm out of his mouth in great strings. I am positive that if I had not got that bottle of cough medicine, my boy would not be on earth today.—JOEL DEMONT, Inwood, Iowa. For sale by L. R. Irwin, Druggist.
