Patrons of the mail route would do the carriers a good turn, by keeping a few stamps on hand to place on their letters instead of putting loose change in the boxes. It causes the carrier a good deal of inconvenience to have to take the stamps off and fish for pennies, especially on a cold day. A little thoughtfulness on the part of the patrons in this regard would be appreciated by him.

Mr. N. W. Holler, of Ohio, in writing to the HERALD, says: "My parents were natives of your county, born near Woodstock, in the year 1800. My father's name was Joseph H. Holler, his father's name was Henry Holler, they settled near Woodstock in 1700 and some, I am interested in the name. Have you any by that name in your or near by counties?"

Yes, we have a number of families by that name in Shenandoah and some in Rockingham. The names Henry Holler and Joseph Holler are still familiar in this section. About the year 1750, and probably a few years sooner, there was a large settlement in the Valley, by parties who came from Lancaster county, Penn. They were pleased with the fertile lands of this Valley and while many, some years later went west to find homes on the cheap lands, many remained and the descendants of those settlers still here. The Hollers are a respectable well to do family, and we have no doubt, that Mr. Holler if he would visit the Shenandoah Valley would find hundreds of his relatives, who would extend to him an open hearted, Virginia hospitality.

AN IMPORTANT MEASURE.

Hose Company No. 1, an efficient part of our department has no place to store their equipment and no hall in which to meet. Heretofore they have been renting an alley, on the Newton property, which they covered as a store-room for their equipment, and have been renting a room to hold their meetings at a cost of $24.00 per year.

They have endeavored to secure a suitable place for their use as a fire company, but have not succeeded. Now the question is, shall this company disband for the want of a hall?

A proposition has been made to purchase the old Bank building on South Main street. This building we are informed can be purchased for the sum of $1000, the deferred payments to bear five per cent. interest. As we are informed, the company proposed to improve and keep up the building, furnish all needed equipment for the fire company, provided the town would purchase the building. The proposition appears to us as a very fair one.

Whatever cash appropriation the town could make at this time, which, we are informed, is from $300 to $500, would so reduce the cost of purchase, that it would require a very small appropriation each year to meet the interest on the balance of purchase money, much less than if the town should undertake to keep in order the equipment of a hose company.

We have one of the most efficient fire departments in the State, and we think the Town Council should not hesitate to give to the fire companies whatever is needed, in order to keep up their efficiency to the highest standard.

We omitted to say above that the Newton alley must be given up, as Mr. Newton cannot longer spare it.

Mr. Atwell Sells Out.

Mr. Samuel R. Atwell, junior member of the large clothing firm of Horsey and Atwell of this place and Winchester has sold his interest to Mr. W. O. Horsey the senior member of the firm. Dr. Currell's Lecture To-night.

With no tricks of delivery, he had something to say, and said it with a grace and finish that held the closest attention of the audience from the opening to the close. Few lectures have been given in this city so thoroughly enjoyable and instructive. Besides being a finished scholar, Professor Currell is evidently a man of high intellectual vigor and versatility as well, and Virginia is to be congratulated in having him among the instructors of her youth.—Lynchburg News.

RARE JANUARY WEATHER.

While many of the weather prognosticators predicted an open winter, none of them expected the summer weather which we had about the middle of January, when the earth worms crawled to the surface, the robins flitted about as in the late springtime and the buds swelled preparatory to blooming.

As is always the case, many persons said that we never had such January weather before. Man forgets nothing so readily as the weather of previous years.

At Dale Enterprise in Rockingham county a record of the weather has been kept for many years. The Harrisonburg News publishes from that record as follows:

In consulting the records of the past 27 years we note the fact that there has been but one instance in that time when there was a higher maximum temperature in January than that of last Sunday, and also but one instance when the average temperature for that month ranged higher than 1 degree above normal for the present.

In the winter of 1890—which is remembered by many as "The Gulf Stream" winter, and the winter too, when it was said that the entire populace of Baltimore, Md, was held in the clutches of "A Strong Grippe,"—the name then given to the new disease supposed at the time to have only shortly before been imported from Russia—the maximum temperature reached 75 degrees on the 12th of January, while the average for the entire month was 48 degrees. This is 16 degrees above normal of the past 27 years.

In January 1899 the average temperature was 40 degrees, which corresponds exactly with that of the present January thus far (22 days), which is 8 degrees above the mean of the past 27 years.

The high average for the present January is especially remarkable when it is remembered that on the 9th and 10th consecutively the minimum range was 4 degrees and 2 degrees above zero. In the year 1890 the January temperature was at no time lower than 12 degrees above zero. From the January records of the year 1890 we extract the following:

"Monday, Jan. 6. Weather today of a warm, soft temperature, that reminds one of April or May. Thermometer 59 degrees.

"Friday, Jan. 10. An unusually warm and summer-like day. Wheat fields are quite green everywhere. Thermometer 67 degrees.

"Saturday, Jan. 11. Very warm day; buds on the trees beginning to swell and in places peach trees are showing their bloom. Thermometer 73 degrees.

"Sunday, Jan. 12. The weather today seems out of the usual order of things for January—everybody remarking that conditions are more like that of May than otherwise. Thermometer 75 degrees.
