

South Carolina Aristocracy. (Read before the Greenville Tupper Club.) "South Carolina Aristocracy" has within the last few months been a subject of frequent declamation, letter writing and newspaper discussion.

Who but a popularity seeking demagogue will deny the influence of blood, or in other words, parental likeness, that obtains in all animated nature. Every intelligent farmer avails himself of the law of parental likeness, to improve his domestic animals, and modify them to suit his peculiar wants.

Who, let me ask, would if choice was permitted, elect to be the son of a horse thief, or high-way Robber? no one. And yet men who desire to curry favour with the drunken, vicious and profligate for their personal ends, decry in loud tones "Family Aristocracy."

It is presumed that the original truth or state of things, out of which this much a do over "South Carolina Aristocracy" has been made to originate, is the peculiarity of our State constitution, and some of our arrangements of government.

What is the nature and quality of "South Carolina Aristocracy?" What has been and probably will be its effect? What are the dangers to be apprehended?

What is the nature and quality of South Carolina Aristocracy? It is essentially the love of the good, the pure, the honest and the patriotic.

actively obscure themselves, and know that some object to blood, particularly those who are extra democratic, but they do not seem to be aware of the fact, that they are themselves aristocratic.

This has been the effect, and will continue to be, in all human probability to be the effect of the true "South Carolina Aristocracy."

Long live "South Carolina Aristocracy," and may it become more and more pure and more elevated and influential.

Volcanoes—Their Causes. The general theory embraced by some leading men of science, (says the Scientific American) in reference to the cause of volcanoes, is that they are smoke-pipes of the great fire in the interior of the earth.

The effect has been to give our people a very high State pride. An extraordinary love for the State, and devotion to her character and welfare. Our people persevere the right with great boldness, and battle for truth without selfish calculations.
