

Daily Eagle

CHIAROSCURO.

She stands in the glare of the light, With a face that is sadder than thought, And eyes that are sadder than thine...

The fall of the flowers at her feet Makes a radiant and many-lined rain, Whose odor creeps upward and round...

Of the voices that cheer her to-night; And vanished the offerings rare, The faces returned to her eyes...

They echo their calls loud and long, They shout as again she appears, But the look on her beautiful face...

Peculiarities of the English Newspapers.

When it comes to "news," the London newspaper is not to be despised. The London papers, for the most part, ignore it...

News items in the London journals, like guests at the London dinner tables, take precedence according to rank and title...

It is not long since Helen Hunt Jackson, talking to Miss Helen Bartlett, who has just had her new play accepted by Lawrence Barrett...

But in spite of the warm cordiality which distinguishes her she can resent an insult quickly and wittily. For example: Not long ago a lady presented a gentleman to the press...

Talmadge's Opinion of Reporters. "Talk about reporters not being truthful and honest," said Rev. Dr. Talmadge, when his attention was called to a recent report of an occurrence in New York city...

The Last Swindle Out. Some time ago a couple of young gentlemen came to this city with a patent last. They took the absolute measurement of the foot and modeled the last after that...

Hammering the Anvil. "Don't strike unnecessary blows when forging iron," says The American Mechanic. "Hammering the anvil" is a habit which many smiths fall into...

In the national house of representatives some few members are careful about their personal appearance, but the majority are not.

Heavy tea drinkers, says The Lancet, first become "wildly excitable," and "then their sense of hearing goes."

Criticizing the Cloth. The Rev. Leonard Bacon is quoted as saying that, at many of the ill-fated summer resorts, there is no one profession so multitudinously represented as that of the man who is supposed to be officiously burning with needles the rescue of a dying world...
