"All right, fire away," said the old soldier, taking off his coat and stretching himself on the operating table. Ether was administered and the damaged eye removed. Right behind the eye was found a piece of wad about the size of half a dollar. How it had not killed him was a miracle. The last case to be brought in was an instance of how much is done in a charitable institution, like the Alexian Brothers', for poor patients. It was the case of a young German who had been run over by a street car and had his leg fractured. His leg began to slough, and he has been an inmate of the hospital since last December. There is very little hope, if any, of his leg being saved, and even if it should be, he will be a cripple for life. The chances are he will die soon, but he steadily refuses to have his leg cut off. If this had been done some time ago he would have been going about now with an artificial leg, but he won't allow it. In his case it is sheer cowardice that prevents him giving his consent, and unless he does it the doctors are unable How Men Act When They Are to operate on him. Meanwhile he receives the best the hospital affords in the way of food and surgical dressings, and he must have cost the Some, Who Look Brave, Whimper, While Brothers at least five hundred dollars since his admittance.
