HEAVY VERDICT AGAINST A RAILROAD COMPANY.

[From the New York Herald Nov. 20th.] A few days ago there was given in the 'Herald' a detailed account of the suit brought against the Camden and Amboy railroad company by Messrs. Lamb & Eastman of this city, to recover for the loss of cotton burned at the burning of the wharf and warehouses of the company at pier No. 1, North River, on the 29th of July, 1864.

So clear and explicit was the above charge, that the jury did not take over five minutes for consultation. The verdict rendered was $114,235 for the plaintiffs, being the whole amount claimed, with interest.

plaintiffs authorized or assented to such an exemption as a condition of the transportation of the cotton. If these bills of lading fully represent the agreement, then they are conclusively upon the parties. But if such exemption clause was inserted without the authority or assent of the plaintiffs, they would not be bound by its terms. The plaintiffs have testified that they did not see the bills of lading until after the fire occurred and upon this point they have not been contradicted. If you believe, therefore, that the goods were delivered to the Illinois Central railroad company or its agent, under the verbal agreement sworn to by the plaintiffs, and that such agreement had been acted on, then the defendant (being the carrier in whose custody the goods were when the loss occurred) is liable, whether such loss was the result of its negligence or not. Under this agreement the defendant is responsible as a common carrier for the loss of the cotton, unless, as I have already stated, such loss was occasioned by the act of God or the public enemy. Loss by fire then, in this view of the case, would be no excuse for non-delivery of the cotton and defendant would be liable for its loss.

THE VERDICT. So clear and explicit was the above charge, that the jury did not take over five minutes for consultation. The verdict rendered was $114,235 for the plaintiffs, being the whole amount claimed, with interest.
