GRANT.

Of old, when Rome's imperial chief returned, To take the wreath victorious earned, In long-drawn pomp, behind his golden ca.

He led the captives and the spoils of war, Through roaring streets the pageant wound along, The awe and wonder of a servile throng, Who worshipped Caesar as they worshipped Jove.

For golden favors, not from grateful love, But thou, great man! returning victor, home From lands that never felt the spear of Rome, Bring from a hundred climes, a nobler spoil To grace a triumph of your native soil.

Not thing to hide, a sycophantic smile, And scatter gold among a crowd of slaves, Or fawn on sycophants and cringe to slaves, By modest merit, not by scheming art, You won and hold a nation's fervent heart; And modest merit is the only cause That gained a careless world's unsought applause.

The poet is splendid, and the present scene Complete fulfillment of a patriot's dream, And yet the future, where man's fate is stored, Must hold for you some destiny in hoar'd; But, whatsoever it be, still keep your state Sublimely simple and sedately great.

Patterning Turkey.

It is a goodly sight, as the summer days wane, to see the flocks of turkeys coming home from the woods and pastures at nightfall with full crops. If the farm has not been overstocked with these birds, they have very largely made their living upon grasshoppers, crickets, worms and other small fry. The regular food they have had has been rather a lack of forage. As the cool nights come on, and the supply of insects declines, the business of fattening properly commences. It should be remembered that plump, well-dressed turkeys not only bring a higher price in market, but enhances the reputation of the producer, and make his market sure for future years. The turkey is one of the finished products of the farm, and one of the greatest luxuries in the market. The farmer should do his best in preparing his flock for the shambles. The main business now is to lay on fat, and the bird should have every night and morning a full supply of nutritious and fattening food. Instinctively the turkey follows his feed, and if the supply is abundant at the farmyard, he will not stroll far from home. Boiled potatoes, mashed, and mixed with meal, and fed moderately warm, is a very excellent feed, both to promote growth and to fatten. If the pig can be robbed of a part of their milk, and it be mixed with a part of the hot potatoes and meal, it will very much improve the dish. It is very desirable to supply the place of insects with some kind of animal food, and butchers' scraps is a cheap and desirable form of food for poultry. Grain should be given at least once a day with the soft and warm feed. Nothing is better than sound corn. The Northern corn is thought to contain more oil than that of Southern growth. Old corn should always be used for this purpose. The new corn keeps them too loose. In feeding only so much corn should be thrown out as the birds will eat up clean. Take a little time to feed them, and study aesthetics as you watch the iridescent hues upon the glossy plumage. There is nothing more charming upon the farm in the whole circle of the year than a hundred or two of these richly-bronzed turkeys feeding near the corn crib. You can afford to enjoy the disappearance of corn while the turkeys are increasing in weight.

Wintering Cattle.

It is time the old, careless and cruel modes of putting cattle through the winter were abolished. Surviving milch cows and young cattle is the most suicidal policy that a farmer can follow. A cow fairly wintered is fitted for the summer work, and will bring a strong calf and will give milk and butter to pay double price for the extra feed and shelter she has had. Many a man keeps a class of good cows in such condition that they are of no value, that they afford no profit, because not run to their capacity. It would be no more foolish for a breeder to put on ten horses and a full force of men and then feed his machine 100 bushels in the time it would thresh 200 than it is for a man to furnish his milch cows one ton of feed while they have the capacity to digest, assimilate, and give returns for two tons. The principle is exactly the same. When a boy was used to hear a great deal said in favor of live-stock that were "easy keepers," the principle is all right in one aspect of the case. It has a fair illustration in the different parts of a mill run by steam. The food of support corresponds with the food of the furnace. Both are necessary, and both are to be economized as far as possible consistent with the production of power. The horse that is simply a movable corncrib is like a wasteful grate in the furnace; both should be replaced with "easy keepers." But the food of production, that which goes to build up growth or give product in milk and butter, is like the food of the mill-stones, and is that from which all the profit comes. It is, however, as well to get mill stones that could be kept running on low feed as to economize in that part of the food of animals from which the profit comes.
