A CROWD OF A THOUSAND.

How it was attracted by Pointing a Case at a Mud-Covered Cabbage.

San Francisco Evening Post.

The other morning two gentlemen were looking out of the window of a house on Market street, when they observed a cabbage roll of a market wagon that was passing.

"What an absurd fuss people in the street make over trivial occurrences," said one of the gentlemen.

"Now, I'll bet a silk hat that I could get a crowd of 500 persons around that cabbage inside of thirty minutes, and yet not leave this room."

"I take the bet," said his friend, pulling out his watch. "Are you ready?"

"Yes; give the word." "It is now 11:30 Go!"

The proposer of the wager led his friend to the window, threw up the sash, and taking a cane pointed earnestly at the mud-covered cabbage with a terrified expression.

"Look out there!" frantically screamed the better, waving his cane. "Take that dog away, quick!"

Several stones were thrown at a dog that was sniffing around the cabbage.

"Take care!" said a car-driver to a policeman, who was shouldering his way through the mass.

Meanwhile the sidewalk was blocked, the street became impassable, women screamed and rushed into shops, and a storekeeper underneath began to take a bucket to one end of a long pole with which to pour water on the devilish invention.

"I should like to know, gentlemen," he said, "what the facts are?"

"What facts?" "Why, what there is peculiar about that cabbage out there?"

"Nothing in the world," was the reply, "except that it seems to be surrounded by about a thousand of the biggest fools in town. Do anything else for you?"

The man reflected a moment, said he "guessed not," and retired. Before he handed in his report, however, Captain Short's watch had dispersed the mob and clubbed 211 separate persons for creating a disturbance.

Shall We Be Buried with Our Fathers.

Saturday Review.

The desire that the members of a family in its successive generation should share a common place of burial is historical and universal.

"He was buried with his fathers" is an ancient memory of blessing and peace as much as "Tuy carcass shall not come to the sepulchre of thy fathers" was a penal sentence and almost a curse.

Only the quiet who is strong enough or famous enough to rely on himself, and who makes a fresh departure as the founder of a family or a dynasty, forsakes the hereditary tomb and builds a sepulchre of his own into which his descendants shall be gathered to him.

"The possession of a burying place" is an accompaniment of the possession of the land, and the English custom has beyond doubt become rooted in the tenure of land under its various forms.

With the narrowing limits in which alone this sentiment can be maintained it is worth maintaining? It is probable that as regards the great majority of our London population, and of that of all our principle centres, the hereditary character of this feeling is already extinguished.

No tradition attaches to Kensal Green or Highgate, and probably no tradition will ever take root there. The husband and wife may desire to be laid there together, and the parent with the lost child; but not, we think, the son with the father, when a generation has passed by. The ceremony, notwithstanding the beautiful association of its name with Christian antiquity, is a neopropolis in the actual feeling of men; and it is an English feeling which that most English of Americans, Bishop Cleveland Cox, long since expressed in very plain words: "I never loved cities of living men, and towns of the dead I hate."
