

THE CONGRESSIONAL CANVASS.

Speaking at Kingston.

Hon. Horace Maynard and Col. Blizard spoke to a fair audience at Kingston on Thursday. We give below a synopsis of Mr. Maynard's speech:

He said he did not feel as if he was among strangers, that he had been here too long. More than a quarter of a century since, he came here a young man, and whatever of good then was in him was owing in a great measure to the encouragement he had received here. He had been frequently honored by their confidence, not only as a lawyer before the bar, but as Representative in the Council, Chambers of the Nation. While practicing in the courts, he had never betrayed their trusts, nor as a Representative, done anything to delay the best interests of his constituents. He had always presented his views so that no one could doubt what they were, and to-day, by the blessing of Providence, he would make them plain to all.

The Government was, as his opponent had said, in the hands of two parties, and he proposed to look at the Democratic party first. It was not new. Before the war it was organized under John C. Calhoun and conducted afterwards by Jefferson Davis, his successor. He never belonged to it—didn't like it. At the commencement of the war, every Democrat in South, except Hicks, of Maryland, was a Democrat. Every Legislature in the seceded States had a Democratic majority. He then read the names of some of the members of the Convention which met in Nashville last September; they were leading rebels, and men put forward to enunciate principles for Tennessee. They had thrown overboard the Conservative plank which was used three years ago to drag Union men into the rebel party. They nominated John C. Brown, a paroled rebel General for your vote. He then read Comb's speech as reported in the Chattanooga Times, as follows: "I am no Radical, no Republican, no Conservative, but I am a Rebel Democrat, and am proud of it. Then if any one wants to make anything out of that let them hurry themselves." (Cheers.)

But the Democrats only put forward that kind of men in districts they are sure of. In the only counties in this district that voted for secession, John C. Vaughn, the Rebel General, knocked the hind sight off of Clementson. In this district they wanted some one to beat Maynard, no matter who, the great object was to "beat Maynard." So they got up a convention. They wanted a uniform or platform. A uniform is made of cloth, and distinguishes an army. A platform is of paper, and distinguishes a party. That's the only difference in getting up a uniform. John C. Vaughn, late Rebel General furnished his old overcoat, and he had in the celebrated "Kingston campaign." (Cheers.) The hole in the shirt that he wore while seated on the saddle watching the horses and horns of Union men burn, was patched with a piece of red flannel, from Mrs. Davis' petticoat, the same that Jeff had on when captured. (Cheers.) The hat was one with a goose feather in it, that the rebels throw away, when they skedaddled at the time that Burnside crossed the mountains. My friend, Col. Byrd, furnished the boots. Dave Nelson the spurs, and a gentleman from Fishing Creek the sword, which he brought away all right, except that the blade was gone. They wanted some one to wear the uniform. Byrd got up and said the boots fitted him, and he'd wear it, but some one asked, "didn't you wear them at Mill Spring?" "Yes." "We see them a little too often, you went do." Dave Nelson thought the spurs would fit him, but they said, "We have felt them, we can't take you." So they took my friend Col. Blizard. (Cheers.) I don't like the uniform, and don't like to see my friends in such company. After speaking of Mr. Blizard's antecedents, he read the Democratic platform.

He said he was in favor of removing disabilities from 1st. Union men who became involved in the rebellion, and instanced Mr. Wisner, and explained in what way he was connected with the rebels.

2d. That class who were rebels but turned over and joined the Union army.

3d. Men who were rebels until the close of the war, but who took hold honestly and earnestly, and in good faith to sustain the Government, and in good faith to those who are rebels now, like John C. Brown, the paroled rebel General, who, in his speech at Knoxville said he loved the Union. He loves it as a wolf loves sheep, or a fox young geese.

Those who hang out pictures of leading rebel Generals, but never think of allowing one of a Union man to be seen in their houses. When Admiral Farragut, a Tennesseean, born and raised in our own district, and as brave a man and gallant an officer as the world ever saw, died, there were none except a few Union men to do him honor. Yet, when Gen. Lee died, the bells were tolled all over the South, and what has he done but to try to overthrow the Government? I desire to say nothing against him, now that he is dead, but simply cite him to show the strong feeling existing among the rebels of the South.

Since the Democratic party had gained control here they had swept away the school law, the immigration law, and put a clause in the Constitution requiring men to pay poll-tax before voting.

Mr. Blizard had requested him to say that he didn't vote for that. He was sorry his friend did not leave his name of the Constitution like Mr. Staley. The National debt was a legacy of the rebellion. The Democratic party did not propose to pay it at all. By the act to pay the bonds in gold the price of gold had been brought down to $1.10. General Grant had paid off during his administration $175,000,000 of the debt. At that rate it would all be paid off in 10 years. The Republican party was the first to propose to tax bonds, and did it in the income tax. He said if Mr. Blizard was so much in favor of money to be made in the National banks, why do not the rich men invest? There is a half million allowed to this district. They are the best currency ever issued, the United States being responsible for them. This was the old Whig idea, a national banking system. He here delivered a touching eulogy on the old Whig party, showing with "Truth crushed to earth will rise again The eternal years of God are hers."

He said a great many claims of Union men had been paid, and more were now being paid. He spoke of the river improvements—it was the old Whig doctrine. Congress had already appropriated $30,000 for the Tennessee river. The Republican party had done more for East Tennessee than any party. East Tennessee pays less than $100,000 tax, while the United States pays out $500,000 for pensions, which, together with bounties, &c., make us receive some dollars for every one we pay the United States. He spoke of the whisky law. Before the war the only object with the Democratic party was to trade in slaves, now it seemed from the talk made of it it was to distill whisky, and, perhaps, to enjoy it forever. If a tax was levied it must be enforced. This district only paid $4,000 on liquor while the first and third paid $12,000, and made the whisky under the law. He said that the Government was carried on cheaper to-day, man for man, than it had been done for thirty years, and he could show the figures to prove it. He was glad Mr. Blizard's remarks had given him a chance to make some explanations. He would first speak of the United States Whisky claims. It has always been the aim of the Democratic party here to make the State odious, thinking thereby to injure the State. The claim in question that was for money lawfully paid out in 1812 was paid in 1870, over 58 years afterward. It took time to get claims paid, and it required great care to prevent paying unjust ones. At it was some of the worst rebels had been able to present claims and get them paid, as was well known.

In reference to the defeat of Schenck, he wanted to say a word, and was glad his opponent had spoken of it. Schenck lives in a Democratic district, was able by his popularity to carry it by a small majority. In that district there is a Soldiers' Home, and in some way the vote of those soldiers was thrown out, and that, and that alone defeated him.

He had one competitor but four opponents in this canvass, Brown, Vaughn and Clementson, hitting him behind his back while he was discussing with Mr. Blizard. If he could get them all in a row where he could get a sight at them he wouldn't mind. His opponents were opposed to protection of home manufactures. He was in favor of it. It was first endorsed by our forefathers in 1789, when they passed a bill for that purpose. As an example of how much benefit it is to the country he cited the iron interests of Tennessee, and referred particularly to Rockwood, whose success was owing to the protection extended by the Government, and was of more benefit to this country as a market than both Knoxville and Nashville. He said the gentleman's remarks about the appropriations for the river above Chattanooga were not pertinent. That work had been commenced on the principal obstructions, and as soon as they were removed those above would soon give way. In building a house a man commences at the foundation, and until that was done no one was foolish enough to ask why he did not put up the rafters.

The speaking was conducted with the greatest courtesy on both sides, much to the satisfaction of all. Every one seemed to appreciate Mr. Blizard's honesty, and good intentions, but could not fail to be impressed with the fact that if the Democratic party expect to ever beat Mr. Maynard, they must secure a much stronger man than Col. Blizard. Old Route will be "on hand" at the election, and will give Mr. Maynard four hundred and fifty majority.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. In several cases of scrofulous disease, where the system became saturated with impurities, the blood purified itself, and the scrofulous affections and discharges, which were aggravated by the impurities, were removed, and the system restored to its natural purity. It is a powerful purifier of the blood, and is especially adapted to the treatment of all diseases arising from impurities of the blood, such as Scrofulous disease, Eczema, Pimples, Bores, Ulcers, and all other eruptions of the skin. It is also a powerful purifier of the system, and is especially adapted to the treatment of all diseases arising from impurities of the system, such as Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, and all other diseases of the joints. It is also a powerful purifier of the lungs, and is especially adapted to the treatment of all diseases arising from impurities of the lungs, such as Consumption, Phthisis, and all other diseases of the chest. It is also a powerful purifier of the bowels, and is especially adapted to the treatment of all diseases arising from impurities of the bowels, such as Constipation, Hemorrhoids, and all other diseases of the rectum. It is also a powerful purifier of the kidneys, and is especially adapted to the treatment of all diseases arising from impurities of the kidneys, such as Gravel, Catarrh, and all other diseases of the urinary system.
