

HOME CIRCLE.

THE CRADLE SONG OF THE POOR.

Hush! I cannot hear to see thee stretch thy hands in vain; I have got no bread to give thee, Nothing, child, to ease thy pain.

Better that thou shouldst perish early, starve to soon, my darling one, Than live to want, to sin, to struggle vainly, still, as I have done.

I am wasted, dear, with hunger, and my brain is all oppressed, I have scarcely strength to press thee, Wan and feeble to my breast.

MEN OF THE PAST AND PRESENT.

It is very common to hear persons drawing an unfavorable comparison between men of the present day and the men of twenty five years ago.

It is very common to hear persons drawing an unfavorable comparison between men of the present day and the men of twenty five years ago. They claim that we are in a state of degeneration, that men are less honest, less talented and physically inferior to their fathers.

In Webster's time, man-worship was more popular and more common than it is now. Men are thinking for themselves more and more every year, and as they progress in forming their own opinions they are less likely to fall into the error of adopting everything as truth.

We believe there is as much statesmanship, as much culture, and as much genius to be found among men of the present age as among those of any former time.

"Poor Carlotta" is reported dead. The daughter of the late Leopold I. of Belgium, by his second wife, the daughter of Louis Philippe of France, and wedded to Maximilian, Archduke of Austria, future emperor to smile upon her birth and marriage alike.

MARRIED FOUR TIMES TO THE SAME WOMAN.—In the celebrated Jumel case, in progress in New York, Monday, Mr. Paul R. G. Perry testified as to his marriage with Miss Eliza Jumel Chase, daughter of the defendant, to the effect that he was married, first, by the maire of Cordouan; second, by a Roman Catholic priest; next, by a minister of the Episcopal church; last, by the American consul at Cordouan. The ceremonies lasted two days.

THOS. G. BOYD.

A Brief Sketch of His Life, Military and Civil.

Those who have read the remarkable incidents in the life of Thos. G. Boyd during the past few months, as portrayed in the public press, have doubtless imagined him to be far different from what he really is; and those who have given their imagination wings would not have recognized in the quiet, gentlemanly individual who was so regular in his attendance at court last week and was on such intimate relations with Messrs. Nelson and Cooke, as one capable of committing the crimes proven against him.

Boyd is the son of a Monroe county farmer and is about thirty-two years of age. He is about the medium height with black hair, beard and mustache. Possessing the most polished manners, he moved in the highest circles in society and made many friends in his large list of acquaintances.

At the commencement of the war he espoused the cause of the Confederacy and entered the Third Regiment of Tennessee Infantry as a private soldier. The regiment was then commanded by Col. J. C. Vaughn, and when that officer was made a Brigadier, he promoted Boyd to the position of ordnance officer on his staff, in which capacity he served until the end of the war. Shortly after the surrender he married Miss Thomas, of Sullivan county, by whom he has three children living. The devotion of his wife was strikingly manifested during the trial and could not fail to add to his remorse when he contemplated the grief and distress she suffered his sake.

His influence in the community was great, and he gave liberally to deserving objects, but not so lavishly as to create suspicion that his means were too easily acquired. In fact, so well did he manage his affairs, and so unexceptionable was his deportment, that when the charges of fraud were first made but few gave them credence, and when they were pressed he found no difficulty in giving the required bail.

The particulars of the transactions in which he figured so prominently are known throughout the land, and now that he has come to expiate the errors he committed, let his fate be a warning to all who crave riches and seek to acquire them by any except legitimate means.

It is the most dangerous violation of law to relieve men from taking care of themselves. There is no other matter that is so likely to carry demoralization to the individual disorganization to society and annihilation to benevolence as to relieve man from this law of caring for himself.

Human Nature.

A Paris correspondent argues that a married woman on the stage exercises less magnetism over an audience than a single woman does; that the fact that she belongs to another, that her brightest glances, sweetest smiles and most musical tones are for him, unconsciously diminishes her influence, and states, in illustration, that there offered in Paris what were called Christine Nilsson watches, which had a great sale, but when she took a husband their demand so sensibly diminished that the proprietor changed their name.

Senator Sumner.

A late Washington dispatch contains the following: Senator Sumner is still quite feeble. It is doubtful if he appears in his seat in the Senate again this session. The attending physician still visits him twice a day. The physician last visited him at 10 o'clock this evening, and injected morphine into his arm to enable him to sleep.
