VALUE OF SCIENTIFIC KNOWL-EDGE TO FARMERS.

A little knowledge has been said to be a dangerous thing-drink deep or taste not : but however true in the days of the English poet, it is folly to assert it at the present age. It is, in fact, the reverse. A large amount of soientiffe lore has succeeded in our time in only producing a set of visionary theorists-men whose life-time labors result in producing some impractical metal or wild theory of transmutation, as a fifth leg to a horse. At the same have seen men experiment for years, spending large amounts of money, when by a mere accident they stumbled upon the object of their search and found it the result of a most simple combination; so simple that they had passed the idea by with contempt.

We have not the slightest doubt that millions of dollars might have been saved to this country it all farmers had known that their bara yard manure contained a material called ammonia, which rapidly disappeared when that manure was exposed to the air and flesh, brewers' grains, and other stimuweather, but that a little ground plas- lating food, the flesh may not be so solid ter, or even earth, mixed with the and pure as if fed upon dry grains, bern yard manure would stop this meal, vegetables, and young sweet waste. It does not require any great grass. The flesh of a sleaghtered or depth of study for a farmer to learn will give the taint of an onion which that sods or potash put in his soil makes he a te several days before; so will the a combination with the cand (cilica) dech of poultry be tainted by having that causes it to dissolve, and that un- access to filthy sewers and vaults. less this sand becomes soluble the stalks of grain will not be firm and living animals clean and warm or cool strong to hold up the heads or ears. It places, to which they can resort at will, does not require any great amount of so as to preserve in themselves an brain thought for a farmer to remember even, agreeable, and healthful temperthat sods, potash, and lime, when com- ature at all times. We would not have any frmer place chemical knowledge shove practical experiments. but to make the one his aid in conducting the other. A little seigntific knowledge may, by such a course, be made of great value to the farming community, and be by no means a dangerous thing .- N. Y. World.
