Reminiscences of the Private Life of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston.

BY REV. EDWARD POSTHUME. [No. 2.] HIS EQUIVOCITY.

I have said that he had at all times perfect self-control. I will mention some instances in which I saw his power of self-government severely tried, but his temper stood the various tests admirably. It was once fishing with him in the Colorado river. A large bass seized his hook, and it required all his skill to reel him to the surface of the water with a small silk line. After a contest of several minutes with the powerful fish, he succeeded in bringing his fine proportions in full view; but just as he was about landing him, with a sharp strain upon his rod, he gave an impetuous bounce, and disappeared. He cleared the depths of the stream, leaving the snapt line tangled fast to a willow limb, high above the head of the disappointed General. He gave it a gentle pull; but finding it hung fast, he walked up the bank and cut a pole with a hook to it, and pulled down the limb very cautiously; and then sat to work very deliberately to untangle the Gordian knot into which he, the bass, and the limb together had tied the line. After the patient labor of at least an hour, he succeeded in righting his tackle, put on another hook and minnow, and "threw out" to tempt another bite. In the meantime I watched his motions, very much amused at the mishap, but said nothing; he made no exclamation of impatience, and exhibited no emotion. I then remarked: "General, although you are not a member of the church, I believe you are a better Christian than myself in one respect—you are more patient. If old leak Walton himself had lost his fish after such a tussle, and lost his hook with him, and tied up his tackle in that way, he might not have cursed the fish or his luck; but I think he would have said something spiteful, and have felt a little blasphemous." He replied, "I have long since learned, Sir, by experience, that it is best never to get excited about anything; for in a fit of excitement, very sensible men are apt to do or say some thing rash or foolish, for which they may have to repent in a cooler moment."

He had a very valuable Newfoundland dog, which was a very great favorite with the family. He guarded little Sidney, McClung and Bettie, his three youngest children, in their rambles about his premises, and I think he sometimes pulled the little girl in a toy carriage. But the dog one day went to the help of a man, neighbor to play with a "cur of low degree," a proper dog for a master as mean and worthless as himself. This man, who had been kindly treated by the General and his family, but who envied and hated him with that sort of malice which the base and vulgar generally cherish towards the noble and refined, to distress the children, or show his spite against the distinguished neighbors, or from the prompting of some petty motive which is only understood by the devils that got into the wine of Genesarat, or by those who are instigated by them, threw a piece of meat poisoned with strychnine, to the dog, which came home and in a few minutes died with convulsions, in the presence of the children and their parents. The little children wept bitterly the loss of their favorite, and Mrs. Johnston shed tears. The General was deeply distressed, but said nothing in anger. Some one present declared that the villain who committed the deed ought to be prosecuted or shot. He replied that if he sued or killed him, it would make the man no better, and it would do himself and his family no good—that he would be compelled to endure the outrage, as there was no redress for it. The dog was dead, and nothing could restore him to life, and he hoped that his family would bear their loss with fortitude.—Jackson Charles, a fugitive from the Crescent Monthly (New Orleans) for May, as its leading article, a well-written paper, styled "General Lee and his Campaigns," by J. Quinan Moore, Esq., in which he is represented as a scoundrel, which refers to the final scene, the surrender of General Lee's army, and contains a tribute to that great leader, which is as just as it is beautifully expressed.

which is as just as it is beautifully expressed. There stood the remnants of that once glorious army that had dipped its conquering banners in the crimson tide of eight and twenty sanguinary battles, and strewed its heroic slain from the feet of the Pennsylvania mountains to the gates of its own capital city; that had given Manassas to Beauregard, and twined the fame of the Seven Pines' battle in the laurel wreath of Johnston; that had caused the waters of the Shenandoah eternally to murmur the fame of Stonewall Jackson; and, stretching its right arm out to the distant West, had planted victory on the drooping banners of Bragg; that had witnessed four gigantic campaigns, and through all their shifting and tragic scenes, and under all difficulties, trials, toils and dangers, had remained steadfast and faithful to the last—and after having witnessed the rising of the Southern constellation, as it loomed up brightly on the horizon of war, pursuing to its splendid zenith the fiery path of Mars, now beheld, not unmoved, its declining splendors going down in the gloom of eternal night. And he, its illustrious chief, whose lofty plume was ever its rallying point in battle, and around whom its affections warmly clustered, now commended it for its past devotion, and bade it adieu forever. Slowly and sadly he rode from that mournful field, his strong sword hung shattered at his side, and the cause that he fought for was beneath the foot of power. Few were the eyes that grew not moist at witnessing that departure. It was the agony of a great cause finding expression in the sublime soul of the great defender. And though that cause be dead, yet will its memory continue to live, and ever honored will be those illustrious names that were sacrificed for its sake. And on the scroll of fame no name among the list of eminent worthies will shine with a purer, clearer or more resplendent light than that of Robert Edmund Lee. His fame is monumental. His name will be placed alongside those of the great captains of history—Mariborough and Saxe, of Tilly and Eugene; and as long as the fame of the Southern struggle shall linger in tradition and song, will his memory be cherished by the descendants of the Southern race; while his character will stand up in the twilight of history like some grand cathedral, lifting itself in imperishable beauty above the objects of the earth, majestic in its vast proportions, awful in its solemn stateliness, sublime in its severe simplicity.

Baron Rothschild's Wine Cellar. A correspondent, who has been fortunate enough to get a peep at Baron Rothschild's wine cellar in Paris, thus describes its contents: "It is not enough to eat—man must drink too. I went to the cellar, where the butler waited for me, lamp in hand. The massive oak door vibrated with the creak of the lock, and we entered the first cellar, whose sides are filled with quadrangular shelves surmounted by a label containing the name of the wine and the date of its bottling. I do not know the value of the bottles' contents, but their outward appearance has nothing repulsive. Their sealed mouths are covered with a respectable mold, and their sides are hidden under the dust of thirty years. I noticed the Chateau Queen of 1834, Branne Monton of 1839, and St. Julien of 1840. Very accurately, there are 24,000 bottles of wine in the Baron's cellar, worth at the least, 240,000 francs. It contains wines of every country, from the golden crops of Laeryma Christi to the purple syrup of the Cape; from the ordinary juice of Macon wines to the precious cascades which pour from Mecca's presses. The cellars where the liquors and spirits are kept are as rich as the wine cellar, and like the latter, has its catalogue. Baron de Rothschild's servants drink two barrels of wine a week. As soon as a barrel is brought to the house, it is at once bottled; he allows no such thing as drinking from the cask. As I was leaving the house a footman came and said the Baron wished to see me. I hastened to his office. He said to me: 'My dear sir, I have thought over the matter, and you would oblige me by publishing nothing about my home. I bowed profoundly without saying a word, determined to reply publicly to the request of the capricious millionaire. 'Had I called on you, Baron, the eve of the issue of the Austrian loan, and said to you, Baron you will be particularly agreeable to me if you will have nothing to do with the Austrian loan, you would have replied that the whim of a newspaper writer must yield to the interests of 100,000 subscribers. Allow me, therefore, to solicit that you wish your eye to the measure which 500,000 readers will have in entering the mansion of the most illustrious banker in the world.'"

President Johnson. The Jersey City Standard thinks President Johnson will not be able fully to accomplish his mission during his present term, and says: "We believe, too, that the Democracy will accept him, even to the abandonment for the occasion, of their traditional policy, without a convention, and without a platform, as the people's candidate for President. Such would be our desire and advice, and such a course would be worthy of the great occasion which demands of the Democratic party any sacrifice for the preservation of our institutions that government, now so imminently imperiled. The programme is very simple by which cliques and cabals may be set aside and the verdict of the nation fully obtained. "It is only necessary for the voters of each Congressional District of the whole Union, who approve the policy and conduct of Andrew Johnson, to avoid, as far as possible, designing, caucuses and packed conventions, and choose at the proper time, a suitable and faithful representative as their candidate for Presidential election, and these may then meet first in States, and then in general convention, to take counsel together for the details of the campaign. There should be no inside organizations, or secret 'rings,' but the whole question should be put down upon the broad basis of the popular will. It is more fully and honestly expressed, and then the triumph of the great principles of popular sovereignty, and the restoration of the Union on the basis of the Constitution will be signal—complete—overwhelming! So mote it be."

A Very Good Story. We like a good story, and the last number of Blackwood furnishes one as follows: Some years ago, when all the world was mad upon the lotteries, the cook of a middle-aged gentleman drew from his hands the savings of some years. Her master curious to know the cause, learned that she had repeatedly dreamed that a certain number was a great prize, and she had bought it. He called her a fool for her pains, and never omitted an occasion to tease her upon the subject. One day, however, the master saw in the newspaper, or at his bookseller's counter, that the number was actually the £20,000 prize. Cook was called up, a palaver ensued; had known each other for years, both to part, etc., in short he proposed and was accepted; instants on marriage being celebrated next morning. Married they were; and as the carriage took them from the church, they enjoyed the following dialogue— "Well, Molly—two happy events in one day. You have married, I trust, a good husband. You have something else—but first let me ask you where have you looked up your lottery ticket?" "She thinking that her master was only bantering her upon the old point, cried— "Don't ye say no more about it. I thought how it would be, and that I should never hear the end on't, so I sold it to the baker of our village for a guinea profit; so you need never be angry with me again about that."

Get an Indication of Character. Observing persons move slow, their heads alternately from side to side, while they occasionally stop and turn around. Careful people lift their feet high and place them down flat and firm. Sometimes they stoop down and pick up some little obstruction and place it quietly by the side of the way. Calculating persons generally walk with their hands in their pockets and their heads slightly inclined. Modest persons generally step softly, for fear of being observed. Timid persons often step off from a sidewalk on meeting another, and always go round a stone instead of stepping over it. Wide awake persons "toe out," and have a long swing to their arms, while they shake about miscellaneous. Careless persons are forever stubbing their toes. Lazy persons scrape about loosely with their heels, and are first on one side of the walk then on the other. Very strong minded persons have their toes directly in front of them, and have a kind of stamp movement. Unstable persons walk fast and slow by turns. Venturous persons try all roads, frequently climb the fences instead of going through the gate, and never let down a bar. One idea persons and selfish ones, toes in. Careless persons are apt to hit their knees together. Good natured persons snap their fingers every few steps. Fan loving people have a kind of jog movement.

THE INSURANCE COMMISSIONER TO THE LEGISLATURE: "The Etna Insurance Company, of Hartford, one of the most successful Fire Insurance Companies of this or any other country." "Connecticut Companies follow the rules and practices of the Etna almost as carefully as if they were embodied in statute law." "Again, pointing to errors of practice in New York companies, the Etna's successful management and solid rules are called to their attention thus: "It still remains more a matter of wonder than imitation in the Insurance world." "By what subtle alchemy has this corporation been enabled to turn its full-paid capital into the philosopher's stone?" "The extraordinary events which have distinguished its unparalleled financial history."
