I hear the rustle of autumn leaves. The cold winds botsterous sweep. They mean and sink like a child in pain. Till they wears at last and sleep. that a darker shadow is on arr heart.

And a deeper grief in my breast—
would I could sol myself to sleep,
And my head and my heart might rest.

The fitful light of the glowing coals,
Light the gloam of a sunny smile,
Lightens my face, while my weary heart
To sorrow runs sadly the while.

O. for the sound of a loving voice,
Like life on the desert strand.
To waken the music in my sold
With the touch of a muster hand.

Like the falling leaves our life is brief, And frail as the moon's pale ray— Dreaming and seeking for newer joys, Ere we grasp them—passing away!
