The Cobbler.

BY SAMUEL W. PEARCE.

Tom Lupton was a cobbler fat, His years were forty past, Yet, notwithstanding all his health, Each day he saw his "fat."

And if his children troubled him, He strove to make amends, And as he laid them across his knees, He called it "waxing ends."

If not content with such a treat, They would but louder howl, He'd deal them those an "upper cut, Sail in and thrash them 'awl."

But one day Tom was taken ill, Said he, "I'm done, I feel, You this poor earth no sorrow has That Heaven cannot heal."

And now I've 'fooded' my accounts, I'm nearing now my goal, My poor old breath is "waxing" faint, But peaceful is my "sole."

Then quietly Tom breathed his "last," From earth his "sole" ascends; 'Tis useless that we for him mourn, For "awl" must have an "end."

A WAR REMINISCENCE.

The Battered Veterans and the Good Old Woman of Tennessee.

From the St. Louis Democrat.

"Pore soldier!" exclaimed a lone old widow in East Tennessee, as a battered veteran in blue appeared at her door, and meekly asked for a cup of cold water. "Pore soldier! I know in reason that you are tired and thirsty, and that you will be powerful glad to get a drink of water, not to speak of a little suthin' to mix with it."

"Thank you, mum; but I belong to the Daughters of Temperance, and can't drink, unless it is a little in the way of medicine, and I do feel very weak, as I have marched more than forty miles to-day."

"Forty mile! The laws have mussey! How could you do it? Why, it would kill my mule."

"It is very hard; but we get used to it. I wouldn't have minded it, if I had anything to eat."

"Sakes alive! Do come in and sit down. Pore soldier."

The good old lady brought out a black bottle, from which the battered veteran poured a teaspoonful into a glass of water, and took a vigorous pull at the bottle when her back was turned. Then she placed before him a substantial supper of ham and eggs and corn bread and coffee, upon which he advanced in gallant style.

"And you are mighty young to be a soldierier!" she said, looking at him benignantly over her spectacles.

"Yes, mum; I am the only son of my widowed mother; but my country called me, and my duty to my country is only second to my duty to my Creator."

"So? Why, you talk as peert as a minister."

"I was studying for the ministry when the war broke out."

"I had a notion that the soldiers were all so wicked; but I'm glad to find out that they ain't. You have seen a power of fightin', I reckon?"

"A great deal, mum. It is hard for a Christian to take life; but the enemies of our country must be punished."

"Jess so. Have you ever been wounded?"

"Very often. I was once shot through the heart."

"Through the heart! 'Lawful sakes! Didn't it kill you?"

"Not quite. The intercostal muscle was penetrated longitudinally and extravasated with varicose veins; but the bullet ranged across the left lobe of the arachnoid artery, producing a comminuted fracture of the anterior process of the cerebellum, and causing a lesion of the spinal viscera and the hypophosphates of the fibula, and that delayed my recovery."

"You don't mean to say that you lived through all that?"

"I am spared, mum, to be an humble monument of the mercy of Providence."

"Should think so. What was that noise? It sounded like somebody down the cellar."

"Nothing but rats. Don't be alarmed, madam. I am here and will protect you. I once defended the house of a widow when it was attacked by a dozen guerrillas; I was obliged to kill seven of them, and the rest ran away."

"Do tell! Should think you ought to be an officer."

"The President has tried to persuade me to accept a commission as General, but I have believed that I can serve my country better in my present sphere. Thank you, I don't care if I do take a spoonful of that, I must be going now, with many thanks for your kindness. It is nearly time for our evening prayer meeting, and I must be there to open it. Have you such a thing as a pocket Bible to spare? Mine was destroyed in the last battle by being struck by a bullet in my coat pocket. It was the last gift of my beloved mother, and it saved my life."

"Lawful sakes! Which pocket?"

"The behind pocket, mum."

"What a blessed thing it is to have a Bible? There is one that belonged to my Matilda Jane; but I know that you will make a good use of it, I will remember you in my prayers, pore soldier!"

As the last rays of the setting sun lighted up the face of that battered veteran, they shone upon two big tears, that slowly trickled down either cheek, making miniature canals through the dust that coated his epidermis. He walked up the road until he was joined by several more battered veterans, who came out from a corner of the fence. Two of them bore a keg, others carried tin buckets, others had their arms full of bottles.

"Have you got it, boys?" asked the veteran to whom the Bible had been presented.

"All right, my covey. Ten gallons of peach brandy, a keg of apple-jack, and ever so many bottles of blackberry wine. The old gal was well fixed."

"You made such a d— of a noise that she would have smoked you if I hadn't been there to throw her off the track. Let's go and divide. I ought to have the biggest share
