

The Free Press asserts that Gen. Alger is a rich man; so is Bogote. That Gen. Alger made his wealth in the lumber business; so did Bogote. That Gen. Alger could not have made money in the lumber business but for protection; neither could Bogote. That if Gen. Alger were not wealthy he could not afford to run for governor; neither could Bogote. Its article shows that, but for protection, the immense lumber business of Michigan could never have been built up, adding so greatly to the prosperity and wealth of the state, and furnishing such a valuable home market for farmers; which is all true; and then it argues that this farmer should, for those reasons, vote against Gen. Alger, and, of course, against Bogote also. If, as the Free Press asserts, Gen. Alger was nominated because he is a rich man, so was Bogote, who certainly was not nominated because of his brains, his education, his character, or his services to the country; whereas Gen. Alger was nominated because of his brains, his education, his character, and his gallant service to the country in the hour of peril and of need. The more arguments of this sort the Free Press publishes, the larger will be the vote for Gen. Alger.—Det. Post
