BASS IN STREAMS.

My Dear Buck: There are many reasons for giving the black bass the title of "gamest fish of fresh water." For his size and weight he puts up as snappy a fight as any fisherman could wish for. Take a small-mouth bass in a swift-running stream and it will be a case of matching your knowledge of the fishing game with his keenly developed instinct, and at that, you have to keep your eyes open or he will slip one over on you and break for other waters.

As to main strength the bass, for its size, carries a larger package of that stuff than any other fish. Often when hooked it will plunge to the bottom and stick there to a fare-you-well. Nothing can budge him except your strength against his husky muscular development, and this puts a heavy strain on your tackle that often shows up a weak point in your equipment and it's "good-by" bass. At times you will think that the bass has edged into a rocky crevice and has propped his strong fins against the sides to give him leverage, and believe me he has sense enough to do it. He is wise enough to dart around submerged rocks and saw a line or gut leader on the ragged edges and make his get-away.

One of His Many Tricks.
One of his stock tricks is to watch your line and the moment he gets a little slack, up out of the water he jumps and gives a shake that would make a fair-sized "muskie" turn green with envy. This is not merely a shake of the head as practiced by other game fish, but a strong jerky shake that brings into play all the muscles of his body. He does not stop at one jump, but will leap repeatedly into the air, each time giving a master shake of his husky body. After the first leap you may think you have lost him and start reeling in, when 20 feet away from his first flop up he comes again. This is his method of showing an amateur how a well developed bass loosens a hook from his mouth, and unless you reel in that slack mighty quick, Buck, he will sure show you.

On His Way Up-Stream.
The bass is always on the move up stream, which is likely caused by the scarcity of natural food in the lower waters. He has no love for rapids or riffles and is seldom if ever found in them, but in the quieter waters at the lower end of a rapids or in the eddies on either side he is right at home. Although he does not like the rougher swifter waters of the rapids and riffles, he will often dash into their frothy edge in pursuit of minnows, returning at once to the quieter water. The bass will also dash into very shallow water after some of the small fry, often in water so low that his dorsal fin will be entirely out of the water, returning however, instantly to the deeper water with his catch. In his up-stream migration he will often loaf in pools below the rougher shallower water of the riffles until rainy weather raises the water, making swimming better for him. Right after high water makes poor fishing in most cases, as the bass have gone up stream to new localities and the new feeding grounds are generally alive with eats carried down by the current and this gives him a period of easy feeding. As a rule the bass do most of their feeding in the shallows or below riffles, going to the deep pools for rest and digestion of his overfilled feedbag, at which time it is very difficult to coax him with any lure or bait.

Sports in the Moonlight.
On a moonlight night the bass can be seen jumping up out of the water, having a general good time, just like a bunch of kids in the old "swimmin' hole." They are good night feeders and are generally close to the surface at that time. That they come to the surface at night was shown to me in a striking manner a few years ago. While frogging one night above a riffle in the Mahoning river in eastern Ohio I was slowly rowing across the river when something flopped into the boat behind me. After a few excited moments of considerable activity the flopper proved to be a 3 1/2-pound large-mouth bass, and the following night in practically the same spot, a bass, larger by half a pound, flopped into the boat while the wife was piloting a bunch of suffragettes on a hunt for a mess of frogs. Later I fished this stretch of water with a moonlight mascot wobbler and caught quite a few strings of fine bass, particularly fine I thought for such "civilized" waters.

Bass fishing in the streams, rivers and lakes will be better each year, as the steady stocking of all civilized waters and the rapid increase of the fish as well as the adaptability of the large-mouth to all waters means good bass fishing, which is a keen sport for any one.
