Although it has been some time since I have given you any items from this place, I have not much of interest to relate. It is very dry in this section, it being about four weeks since it rained. Corn seems to be growing where the land has been stirred, but low land farmers are complaining of it dying. Wheat looks well, and our farmers are expecting a good yield and fair price.

Mr. J. S. Jones of this village has the best thresher in the State, and says that he can fan out one thousand bushels per day, and our farmers are getting ready to get their wheat threshed. Our clever agent J. M. D. has had his head shaved, and it looks like a green gourd with its cut off. G. D. Butler and Mr. Conant have turned out their mustangs, and you would hardly know them. The south bound freight train, I learn, on Monday last ran over a fine mare on this road and cut off her hind legs. Mr. J. B. Stacey, who was on the train, passed the animal got up and walked off a short distance and fell dead. She belonged to Mr. Andrew Knight.

Mr. Gilliam Harwell is one of the best farmers in this county, and has the finest garden of the season. He can't be beat on peas. He sticks them with fishing poles, and they run to the top. Can't he gather them with ladders. It is cloudy in the west, and I hope by the next writing we will have plenty of rain, and the farmers' hearts will be made glad and all will be well.
